President's message

Dear Friends,

This is my last message to you as ALAC President. During the past two years, I have enjoyed the challenge of this position and take pride in what I believe to be positive steps forward for ALAC.

The Officers and Board members during the past two years have accomplished much: a newly-formatted Bulletin that arrives regularly and pays its own way; a new handbook; publication of Board meeting minutes in a timely manner; detailed treasurer’s reports and prompt deposit of checks; by-laws revision underway; balloting for elective positions by an accounting firm; to name some but not all.

None of this has been done alone. The hard work of officers, board members, committees, and ALAC members has helped achieve these results and I would like to thank each and every one.

As they say, anything worth doing is not always easy or without controversy. And it hasn’t been. But this isn’t necessarily bad. It is important that we learn how to disagree and come to consensus. This matures us both as individuals and as an organization, and I truly believe we have made strides in these area.

Much work remains, and Dorothy Joan Kendall will bring fresh energy and leadership to the office. She has my support and I wish her the best.

It’s been great and I thank you, again. See you soon.

With warm regards,
Cassandra

The following board members and officers were present: Marie Allman, Richard Camacho, Stephen Campbell, Victor Cohen, Cassandra de la Rosa, Susan Giles, Don Hanson, Carolyn Herbel, Joyce Johanson, Brenda Schmelzel, E Ray Sedzik and Marvin Whitman. There were approximately twenty members also present at different times during the board meeting.

The meeting was called to order at 6:05 pm by the President, Cassandra de la Rosa. She stated in her report that things are moving along well, with good people working hard for ALAC. The 1984 yearbooks are bound and the new handbook has been completed. There is a lot occurring and the officers, committee persons and board members are performing well.

Secretary's Report: Stephen Campbell reported on correspondence received and noted that there have been many inquiries concerning membership, as well as locations of area local clubs. The secretary requested that all corrections to names and addresses be forwarded to him. He stated that election results will be announced at the annual meeting.

Treasurer's Report: Carolyn Herbel reviewed the treasurer's report for the period February 1, 1990, through July 10, 1990. The current general fund balance is $11,236.40.

PLEASE NOTE: A detailed report of the treasurer is attached to these minutes.

Richard Camacho made a motion that the report of the treasurer be accepted. Stephen Campbell seconded. Motion carried.

All committee reports requiring action or discussion were reviewed. The annual meeting will have reports from all committees. Committee reports with areas of special note or mention are summarized below:

Futurity Host Coordinator: Debbie Burke discussed bids for 1991 host club futurity sites:

- Region One: National Capital Area Lhasa Apso Club
- Region Two: Lhasa Apso Club of So. California

Richard Camacho made a motion that those host clubs be accepted. Richard Camacho seconded. Motion carried.

National Specialty Coordinator: Jeanne Hope reported that the 1991 specialty is scheduled for July 7 through July 10, 1991, to be held at the Troy Hilton Hotel in Troy, Michigan. Jeanne announced that Mrs James E Clark had been selected to judge our 1993 specialty and noted that she has had initial contact with Mrs Clark. Two clubs in Region One have indicated an interest in hosting the specialty.

Handbook: Susan Giles reported that the cost of the handbook to ALAC was $2,797.68. We have an inventory of 105 books & 350 binders, 75 of which were forwarded to Joyce Johanson for distribution to new members, the remaining 30 are with Susan. The Board commended Susan on her work in getting the handbook published.

Yearbook: The Board reviewed and suggested comments, deletions and revisions to the proposal submitted by Amy Andrews, yearbook chairperson. The Board recommended that Dorothy Primm consult with Amy, make necessary changes to the proposal and resubmit it to the board for approval. This proposal should include cost estimates and consideration for both hard 3 ring binder, spiral or soft cover type yearbook, and be completed by August 15, 1990.

Finance: Victor Cohen informed the Board that a polling was made concerning the deletion of photographs of previous specialty winners in the 1990 national specialty catalog. The board approved deleting the photographs. An audit of the treasurer's records will be performed after September 1, 1990, by the finance committee.

A lengthy report of yearbook advertising collections for the 1982-83 and 1984 yearbook was distributed. Collections of past due amounts total to date, $1,660.00 with $2,545.00 still outstanding. Several persons with outstanding balances have lapsed their membership. Collection of these amounts might not be possible. Richard Camacho made a motion that the treasurer deal with each outstanding account of an active member by writing a letter to the person in question, asking for proof of payment within 45 days. Failure to pay may result in action being taken, as stated in our bylaws under Article VI. Brenda Schmelzel seconded the motion. Motion carried.

In order to provide educational information about the Lhasa Apso to breeders, judges, exhibitors, and others interested in our breed, The ALAC Bulletin will feature a series of articles focusing on the breed standard. Twenty-five ROM Lhasa Apso breeder-exhibitors, who are recognized for their extensive knowledge and experience in the breed, have been asked to participate.

standard forum

QUESTION FOR THE AUGUST ISSUE:
Our standard reads: “Legs - Forelegs straight; both forelegs and hind legs heavily furnished with hair.” Focusing on the front do you feel this is an adequate and sufficient description? If not please give your interpretation of the front assembly.

Our standard allows room for various interpretations of one’s ideal Lhasa and while this can be a good thing, an explanation should be provided. Any mention of forelegs should describe the entire front assembly as angulation determines what the front should do. The front leg should reach out from under the body, extend itself well forward past the line of the nose, then push off in a smooth lifting motion and reach up back under the body before coming to rest. Viewed from the front the legs should be parallel with no crossing over of the front feet. When in accelerated motion the front legs will converge in a single track but when the dogs slows down or stands the front legs should be parallel. To get this kind of front action the Lhasa should have an angled shoulder blade of 45° with equal length of upper arm, fitting into a lower leg set under the body, with an obvious pro-sternum. In Lhasas we must allow for a moderate bend in the forelegs to accommodate a hopefully oval shaped rib cage necessary for our breed to develop lung power. Lately Lhasa are turning up with straight up and down shoulders set well into the neck, slab sides with no sternum, front legs extended far forward so as to be terrier-like straight with no set-under. Lhasa should be able to cover a lot of ground in a Lhasa manner and they should not move in front like a wire fox terrier. Lhasa breeders have come far in terms of presenting a beautifully sculpted outline with lovely hair but lets try to maintain correct structure under the hair.

Terre Mohr

Forelegs straight is a wonderful “pie in the sky” idea but, in my hundred years experience, I have only seen one Lhasa that truly fits that description! Our breed come from the norther most region of the world and the thin air forced the dogs to have large lung capacities and therefore the front legs had to wrap around the chest area. It should say “forelegs as straight as possible”. The hair part is okay.

Keke Kahn

The whole front assembly should be discussed. Shoulders well laid back and clean, not loaded and/or overly muscled. Should have shoulder blade and upper arm of equal length with tight fitting elbows, forelegs straight. Should have a pronounced pro-sternum. Excessive curvature in the ankles is not desirable. Shoulders when viewed from the top should have one to two finger widths between the blades.

Ellen Lonigro

I feel our standard is too vague overall. Forelegs, hindquarters, topline and movement all need to be addressed separately, as well as over all balance. FRONT QUARTERS SHOULDERs are well laid back, elbows clean and close to the body. FORELEGS well muscled, straight and when viewed from the front, parallel to each other, feet should neither toe in or out to excess. HINDQUARTERS should be strong, muscled and well angulated, when viewed from the rear should be parallel turning neither in nor out. Forelegs and hindquarters heavily furnished with hair. GAIT when viewed from the side should exhibit good extension of fore quarters and balanced drive from the rear for a smooth, effortless stride with no roll or bounce of body, topline level.

Lynn Replogle

In order to safeguard our breed standard from possible misinterpretation I feel that we need to provide a more comprehensive description of the ideal Lhasa Apso.

Our original standard requests, by omission, a normal canine front and movement. This means that we should be striving for a 45 - degree lay-back of shoulder, with just enough room between the tops of the shoulder blades for the withers (the first eight thoracic vertebrae) to rest comfortable between them. The upper arm should be of good length, preferably equal in length to the shoulder blade, and attached to the shoulder blade at a 90-degree angle. The elbows should be held close to the body at the Sentinel Consultants Inc. companion publication for Lhasa Apso fanciers is THE CHAMPION FORM published in 2 editions that cover years 1975 - 1982 and 1983 - 1988. THE CHAMPION FORM provides the same information that appears in the AKC Awards publication. The major advantage to the Lhasa Apso breeder or owner is that we provide all these valuable records in a convenient book in chronological and alphabetical order.

The index provided with each book lists all champions alphabetically by name for quick and easy look-up by name of Champion. Each CHAMPION FORM book contains the records of over 1,000 Lhasa's.

The service will be invaluable to breeders as a reference guide to who is finishing Lhasa's of their bloodlines. To the breeder selling puppies, you can show your prospective buyers the success of your sire's and dam's in producing Champion. To owners of Lhasa bitches in helping select stud dogs with proven producing records.

In addition to the basic history provided by each issue, we will include a customized printout of either;

- Champions from an individual breeder.
- Champions from a designated kennel name.
- Champions from a designated owner.
- Champions from a specified sire or dam.

THE CHAMPION FORM book is just $25, plus $2.40 postage.

Brenda Schmelzel made a motion that ALAC support the opening of herding activities and titles to all breeds and that our AKC delegate convey ALAC’S support by voting in favor of all breeds participating in these herding trials. Joyce Johanson seconded the motion. Motion carried.

Raffle: Carolyn Herbel discussed the enthusiasm that the raffle has generated amongst the membership and specialty clubs. Carolyn Herbel made a motion that no raffle can be held at the national specialty except that sponsored by ALAC or by permission of the raffle chairperson. Brenda Schmelzel seconded the motion. Motion carried.

Gazette: It was announced by the president that the current gazette columnist, Connie Tompkins has resigned. Two letters of interest for the position were read by the president. Ray Sledzik made a motion that Patricia Chenoweth be appointed columnist. Brenda Schmelzel seconded the motion. Motion carried.

National Specialty Catalog Advertising: Marianne Nixon distributed a detailed report of the 1990 catalog advertising. ALAC’S profit will be approximately $2,732.00 less committee expenses. Marianne was commended for an excellent job.

OLD/NEW BUSINESS
Richard Camacho submitted a proposal and suggested that the board review it. It deals with the AKC “hands on” testing. He feels that in certain instances the hands on includes breeder judges and group judges that are unfamiliar with our breed and not qualified to be involved with this process.

Stephen Campbell made a motion that the Heart of America Lhasa Apso Club, which has been diligently collating our yearbook inventory, mail 12 copies to the persons in Australia, who have patiently been awaiting these books. They will be sent without binders. Susan Giles seconded the motion. Motion carried. Once the yearbooks are mailed, the secretary will follow up with a letter.

Beverly Drake made a recommendation for board consideration that the nominating committee be appointed by the new board shortly after September 1, 1990, in order to provide sufficient time for the selection of candidates for the 1991-1992 slate. The secretary will solicit nominations for the committee by mail shortly after September 1990.

There was lengthy discussion concerning the possibilities and consideration of:
1. One permanent national specialty location.
2. Continuing the roving specialty or considering 3 areas rather than one.

The board had instructed the committee to present a draft of the amplification/guide at the board meeting, which was done by mail several weeks ago. Don Hanson made a motion that the Board instruct Norman to have a committee meeting with the members present at the specialty and provide the results back to the Board by the end of the week; the Board would then decide what to do next. Ch. Joyslyn’s Mirage

Black male, Whelped March 22, 1987

Dam: Sunshine’s Black Cherry (Ch. Sunshine’s San Miguel x Ch. Sunshine’s Maris Stella)

Still “in coat”, Raj is a happy-go-lucky little guy who is a delight to be with. He is playful and loving, good with children. Unfortunately, we have to decrease the number of males we have, so we are offering Raj for sale. He is an eager and cooperative stud dog and has some good looking kids just now beginning their show careers. (The male I had in bred-by at the ALAC Specialty is a Raj son.)

We will consider any serious offer.

brisket line. Our standard specifically asks for a straight foreleg, which is consistent with a normal canine front. However, it should also serve to caution us against the dog that is excessively long-bodied or low-stationed as these conditions are almost always accompanied by a bowed forearm, broken-down pasterns and turned out feet. This type of dog (achondroplastic) is usually too heavy-boned as well. Continuing down the foreleg we should have pasterns that are sloping very slightly: ending on small, tight, round, cat-like feet with good pads, that may toe-out just slightly while standing.

Front movement should be strong and smooth, with the forelegs reaching out well ahead of the body as they single-track. There should be no hint of a roll, bounce or hackney. Head carriage on the correct front in motion should be not higher than 45-degrees. Extremely erect head carriage suggests an inefficient front, one that is using the neck muscles to help give the legs enough lift to come forward. The over-all picture should be one of a powerful, ground covering stride with no exaggeration present.

Nancy J Plunkett

For years we have felt that the standard should be revised to form a more complete picture of the Lhasa. Many novice breeders focus only on the parts mentioned in the standard - not the whole dog. As in most instances, it is a mistake to assume that all newcomers will take the time and have the resources to learn anatomy and movement.

Focusing on the front, the following are some of the points we would like to see included in the standard for the Lhasa Apso:

Shoulders should be well laid back, sloping, and lie close to body. Shoulder blade and upper arm should be equal in length. Forelegs straight with moderate bone and heavily furnished with hair. When viewed from the front, forelegs should be parallel to each other. Elbows lie close to body but with sufficient room to allow for freedom of movement. Feet round and compact with well arched toes. Elbows and feet should turn neither in nor out. Dewclaws may be removed.

Carolyn Paulson

"Legs—Forelegs, straight"

Much emphasis is placed on the front structure of a dog because its quality influences and is influenced by the placement of the neck into the shoulders and the back into the wither. A good front is hard to replace when lost because much more is involved than just the front itself. There are three major areas of front structure. First, the wither, where the neck and shoulder blades meet the spine, should be smooth, sloping neatly along the top and side planes and fitting into the back without a dip or weakness. The shoulder blade should lay at a realistic thirty-five degree angle just above vertebral processes. Secondly, the shoulder joint itself should be placed tightly against the chest wall with no "loaded" feel to it. It should appear near the base of the throat as there is no prominent keel in the Lhasa since that would be too much weight to carry in a mountainous terrain.

Thirdly, the legs. Our whole standard is one of comparison to other dogs of Lhasa type (Tibetan Terrier, Pekingese, Shih Tzu, etc.). A call for straight front legs means the legs are not typical of an Achondroplastic dog, though the Lhasa is really a partial Achondroplastic mutation. When viewed from the front, the legs should stand fair and square and should not be bowed or turned at the pastern or out at the elbow. The elbow should be well in against the body to the point that you should not be able to get a finger in easily between it and the chest wall. When viewing the front from the side, the elbow should be in position just below the sternum denoting a lung capacity in the length of the chest rather than a heavier depth of chest. There should be a sense of strength without being overdone and elegance without being fragile or pigeon-boned. Balance is the key. Slapping a "good front" on a dog must be tempered with balance to its rear.

Cherilyn Jozwick

I don’t feel that this description gives an adequate word picture of a correct front assembly.

There is no mention of shoulder layback or (proper set in relation to the front legs.)

In order to have correct movement even in specialized structure the shoulders should be properly placed and the ideal equation of the 45 degree angle should be included, also the equal length of leg and shoulder bones is also important as the short upper arm is a major fault in most breeds today. Straight legs do not constitute an ideally structured front.

Shoulder: 45 degrees and well laid back
Legs ideally should be straight and bones of equal length.

Winifred Graye

The standard’s description of legs is not sufficient, especially when focusing the front, as it is the only place in the standard where a hint of what the front should be is given. While most experienced breeders assume the front should be that of normal dog structure, a necessary function of the standard is to educate newcomers judges, exhibitors and breeders; and to only mention straight forelegs heavily furnished with hair is an injustice to the Lhasa.

An entire section of the standard should be devoted to forequarters, with descriptions of the neck, shoulder blades, length of shoulder blade and upper arm, the angle where the shoulder blade meets the upper arm, legs, and include the current description of feet. Because our standard calls for a "well ribbed up" animal.

the description should include how the front is to fit into the ribs.

My interpretation of the correct Lhasa front is:

Free-flowing movement in front calls for a long, strong neck rising from properly placed shoulders. Shoulder blades slope forward and downward toward the ground and meet the upper arm, equal in length to the shoulder blade, at a 90% angle. The Lhasa apso is well ribbed up, but not barrel shaped. The shoulder blade and upper arm wrap around the ribs and the elbows are tight. Forelegs straight, heavily furnished with hair. Feet are well feathered, round and catlike, with good pads.

Mary Schroeder
Fleetfire

I could answer this both yes and no. On the no side, the Standard is simple and to the point, no room to misunderstand, indicating that the front and rear bone structure is that of a normal canine, with heavy leg furnishings. In the 17th edition of AKC’s The Complete Dog Book, pictured on page 747 is an excellent drawing of a straight front. On the next page is an illustration of a correct hind end. Other excellent illustrations and interpretations of dog terminology are contained in this Glossary section.

On the yes side, the front assembly begins with the shoulders. Good layback is necessary for both proper movement and proper length of the upper arm bone. If the shoulder blade is too upright, Mother Nature will shorten the bones of the upper arm and place the legs too far forward on the body. This also affects the placement of the elbows and their degree of looseness.

The angulation of the rear quarters should match that of the front with good angulation at the stifles and hocks.

IN SUMMARY: Legs - Shoulders well laid back, forelegs straight. The angulation of the rear quarters should match that of the front with good angulation at the stifles and hocks; both forelegs and hind legs heavily furnished with hair.

Pat Chenoweth

The standard is inadequate in describing the legs. This is a very important feature of the Lhasa, and it should be in more detail.

Legs should be parallel, with weight distributed evenly...

AND HER EYES.

Her beauty caught your breath. Artists yearned to capture her beauty and essence in paint and pastels, pen and ink, charcoal and sculpture. Bobbie Lee said it best, when she said, “Nik Ki is a National Treasure, she really belongs to us all.” Her heart was even greater than her beauty. She made history in this breed as the first, and so far the only, Lhasa to participate in 11 National Specialties. This year was to have been her 12th. The National was not the same without her.

Daughter of BIS Ch Tibet of Cornwallis ROM, the breed’s top producer of champions, Nik Ki is the dam, grandam and great grand dam of Champions. She was truly a credit to her pure Hamilton heritage. Nik Ki was more than we ever dared to dream. She filled 16 years with great joy and wonderful memories. And it was too short a time. Nik Ki was all that God meant a Lhasa Apso to be and I guess He could not bear to be without her any longer. Nik Ki, we miss you so much.

in front as well as the rear.
Elbows should be held tightly against the body, not out.
Forearms should be relatively straight, down to the carpal joint. Pasterns slightly just off the center line, for balance.
Hocks should have good angulation - which gives a long effortless stride and smooth gait.
Angulation at shoulders and hip joints should be approximately equal, to provide balanced reach in the front and rear.

Front and rear legs should be heavily coated.

Bill & Sharon Russett

Legs - Forelegs straight does not adequately describe the Lhasa. This description lends itself to two interpretations. First the leg should have ulna and radius bones that are as straight as possible. As a general rule the longer the leg, the straighter these bones appear. Conversely, the shorter the leg the more curvature to these bones, especially the radius bone. To grasp this concept, first thing of a Dalmatian's legs, the a Dachshund. The Second interpretation deals with the placement of the legs as the dog stands - the legs should be parallel as opposed to a "fiddle front" where the carpal joints almost touch. The standard neglects to point out that the toes should toe out about 10o for balance - a point well documented in books on movement such as R P Elliott. The standard does not address the shoulder assembly and the degree of the shoulder layback desired. It is assumed that the standard 45o shoulder is the norm. Detailing the amount of coat on the legs would be best placed under a description on coat.

Sami Brush

"Forelegs straight, heavily furnished with hair."

This is very misleading. Terriers have straight fronts, both above and below the elbow; which accounts for their gait.

A Lhasa's two legs should be straight from the elbow down. However, above the elbow a slight curve should be allowed to allow for the chest to expand. Elbows should be tight to his body.

This is the third and last of a series of articles which attempt to provide the dog owner with an overview of the medicinal products available at your local pharmacy, in the "over-the-counter" or nonprescription category. It is by no means a detailed accounting, but simply a guideline for general use. Your local pharmacist is still the best source of comprehensive information on these matters. Check with him/her for questions of price or quality of products.

PART III: Cough & Cold, Eye, Miscellaneous

COUGH PREPARATIONS: The cough preparations available on a non-prescription basis can be divided into two main categories, non-narcotic and narcotic. The first category usually contains either an antihista- mine to dry up nasal secretions, which can irritate the throat, or dextromethorphan, a centrally acting cough suppressant. Dextromethorphan, abbreviated as DM, is a very effective cough suppressor in a dose range of 10-30 mg., given every 4-6 hours. This translates into 1 teaspoonful to 1 tablespoonful for most cough preparations. Examples of these products are Robitussin DM® Bnylin DM, and the Vicki Formula 44 group. Most of these products also are sold in the generic forms, at a savings of 50% or more.

Narcotic cough preparations usually contain codeine or one of its synthetic derivatives and are very effective in suppressing the cough reflex. The major limiting factors are the drowsiness and dizziness that may sometimes be side effects. The narcotic cough products must be signed for time. The usual dose is 1-2 teaspoonfuls every 6-8 hours.

The other main ingredient is most cough preparations is an expec- torant, such as guaifenesin or terpin hydrate. These compounds break up thick mucus, thinning it out, and allowing it to be expelled easier. It is therefore necessary to provide plenty of water, so that these expectorants can be most effective. Most dogs will tolerate the guaifenesin better than the terpin hydrate, since the latter is usually in untilts of high alcoholic content (40-44%) to improve its solubility. Both of these products also come in generic forms, at considerable savings.

DECONGESTANTS: The onset of a cold virus, or upper respiratory allergies, can produce clogged, stuffy nasal passages in dogs as well as humans. The judicious short-term use of nasal decongestants can help alleviate the problem. Phenylephrine (Neo-Synephrine) and phenylephrine (Alrin) are probably the two most commonly used products available. The latter drug is much longer acting than the former and should only be used once or twice daily. Phenylephrine has a much shorter duration of action and can be used as often as every 4 hours. I would recommend using the pediatric strengths of either product, as the adult strengths could have enough systemic absorption to cause problems, especially in older dogs with heart or blood pressure conditions. Do not use any decongestant for more than 72 hours, or drug tolerance and rebound congestion may occur.

Generic equivalents are available for both of these compounds.

Once the nasal passages are opened, they often become dry and irritated due to scratching or repeated exposure to allergens. They can be remedied by the use of nasal sprays of physiological saline to keep the affected tissues moist. These include such products as Oceanais or Ayr, and are normally located with the nasal decongestants. If the patient is an older dog with congestive heart failure or high blood pressure, please check with your veterinarian before using saline nasal sprays as the sodium can be absorbed from irritated nasal membranes.

ANTIHISTAMINES: This category of drugs is often included in multi-symptom cold preparations because one of its side effects is the reduction of mucus secretions in the upper respiratory tract. This drying effect can prevent problems in elderly male dogs, causing urinary retention and irritation of the prostate gland. They can also aggravate some forms of glaucoma.

The original use for antihistamines was the prevention and/or the relief of the symptoms of allergic reactions, ranging from hay fever symptoms to anaphylactic reactions caused by insect bites or stings. If given early enough, antihistamines can greatly reduce the severity of all allergic reactions. The two compounds most commonly seen on pharmacy OTC shelves are diphenhydramine (Benadryl) and chlorpheniramine (Chortimelt). Both of these products are available in generic forms, at a cost reduction of 25-50%. Follow the dosage recommendations on the packaging as to dose and weight. These drugs have a broad safety range, but dosage in small dogs (less than 20 pounds) should be discussed with a veterinarian.

ANALGESICS & ANTI-PYRETS: These are drugs that relieve mild to moderate pain and reduce fevers. Most of the non-prescription products in this class of drugs contain either aspirin or acetaminophen, or even combinations of the two together. They are available in a wide variety of tablets, caplets, capsules, and even liquid dosage forms, and are sold in both generic and brand names. Aspirin should be the drug of choice in dogs (and cats, too) given in a dose of 33-65 mg. (depending on the size and weight of the animal) every 8-12 hours. Because of the less sophisticated nature of canine and feline lveses, acetaminophen should be avoided. Toxic by-products of acetaminophen can permanently damage the liver and kidneys of dogs and cats, especially when exposed to them on a chronic basis. Other, newer analgesics, such as ibuprofen (Advil, Naprin, etc.) are also now on the OTC shelves, but I would not recommend them without conferring with your veterinarian. My own experience with ibuprofen ended with your veterinarian before using saline nasal sprays as the sodium can be absorbed from irritated nasal membranes.

EYE PREPARATIONS: Non-prescription eye products can be divided into three basic categories: eye washes to clean the eye; lubricants to keep the eye moist; and decongestants to reduce inflammation and "get the red out." The eye washes are usually buffered, isotonic salt mixtures that are used to flush foreign materials from the eye, such as sand grains, pollen, or chemicals. Examples include Collyrium, Dacrocise, and Sodium Chloride for Irrigation.

The eye lubricants come in two forms; liquid drops and ointments. The drops act as artificial tears, keeping the tissues moist and clean. They include such products as Ostor-Tears, Hypotears, and Tearisc. A generic equivalent is available for some of these products. The lubricant ointments, such as Loc-Ituee, are more commonly used at bedtime, because they produce a longer lasting form of lubrication and protection. They are also excellent in protecting the eyes from harsh chemicals and water, which itself can rob the eyes of vital lubrication. Administration of a lubricant ointment before bathing can greatly reduce the irritation to the eye caused by soap and water.

Decongestants for the eye work on the same principle as nasal decongestants, reducing inflammation and contracting the vascularature of the eye, thereby reducing the reddened appearance. Chronic use should be discouraged as it can cause drying of the exposed tissues and a reduction in the tear flow. Examples include Visine, Prefin, Murine Plus, and Clear Eyes. A few of these products, such as Zincum, VasoClear A, and Visine AC also contain zinc sulfate, an antibiotic used to contract the blood vessels and decrease redness. Prolonged use of these products can be very irritating to ocular membranes.

There are also two ophthalmic ointments that have a deiceriant action, that is, they prevent the growth of most bacteria. These ointments are 5% Boric Acid ointment and 2% Silver Mercruic Oxide ointment. They protect the eye from infections after a physical injury, such as a scratch or abrasion, but are not very effective if an infection is already present. This usually requires an antibiotic, either locally or systemically.

MISCELLANEOUS PRODUCTS: A number of medications and other products that normally would not be considered as therapeutic in dogs can provide surprising results in unexpected situations. For example, Vitamin E oil, usually found in the cosmetic section of your aging process in skin, is an excellent skin softener, reducing the size and hardness of calluses on elbows and hooves, and prevent scart tissue from hardening and puckering. Twice daily applications for 2-3 weeks can often produce

Compiled from the records of 1990 THE JUDGING FORM
(Copyright publication of Sentinel Consultants Inc.)

The Lhasa Apso standings for 1990 are based on a point system as follows:

- Best In Show.........................10 points
- Best In Specialty Show.......... 5 points (ALAC 10 pts.)
- Group 1........................... 5 points

In the event of point ties, rankings are based on the dog with the highest number of Best of Breed wins.
After that dogs are listed alphabetically.

This year’s list includes all Champions that won at least two Best of Breed and any class dog that had at least one group placement.
almost total eradication of these problems.

Another medication that falls in this group of special usage is benzoin tincture, or compound benzoin tincture. These compounds are normally used by physicians to protect and toughen skin around wounds and under hard casts. In dogs these tinctures can be applied to the feet, toughening the pads and promoting the healing of tender pads, such as caused by over-exposure to rough concrete or sharp rocks. Once or twice daily applications are usually all that is needed. You may not find this product on the regular OTC shelves, but since it does not require a prescription, most pharmacists can order it for you. It takes 10-15 minutes to completely dry, so it's resultant sticky film is an excellent substitute for Tacky Tape or other traction compounds. One word of caution, it will stain hair, so be careful what and where you use these products.

One other interesting treatment involves the oral antacids, especially Maalox, or Ropan and large, open, weeping, infected sores, such as those caused by excessive chewing or as a result of deep puncture wounds. Topical application of these antacids can inhibit the growth of some bacteria that infect these kinds of wounds. Many pathogenic wound bacteria prefer an acidic environment, and the antacids neutralize this condition. In addition, the magnesium and aluminum salts found in most antacids possess astringent properties and promote tissue wound granulations, thereby accelerating the healing process. Application is usually after cleansing the wound, or at least three times daily.

The last item that I wish to speak about involves a prescription medication, but I strongly urge all dog owners to check with their veterinarian about obtaining a product called an Anakit. It is an insect sting allergy kit that could very easily save the life of your dog. How often at shows have you seen bees and wasps cluster around garbage cans that contain food and drink refuse? Dogs get stung, especially by aggressive yellow jackets. I know of a very beautiful Bearded Collie bitch that was lost at a show just 2 weeks after finishing her championship. After snapping a bee that buzzed her, she swallowed the bee and it stung her in the throat. Since the veterinarian was only "on call" to the show, the animal died of asphyxiation before help could be summoned. The presence of an Anakit might have saved her. It contains a prefilled syringe of epinephrine, a tourniquet, and 2 tablets of a fast-acting antihistamine. These drugs can counteract the immediate effects of anaphylactic shock and give that extra 15-20 minutes that could be the difference between life and death. Again, I urge all dog owners to check with their veterinarians about obtaining a prescription for an Anakit. They normally cost about $18.50 but that would seem to be a small price to pay for peace of mind. The kit comes with directions enclosed and your veterinarian can give you the correct dosage for the epinephrine and how to use it.

LHASA APSO CANADA, Directors and Members,

Through erroneous information I was led to believe that your club was interested in scheduling a Canadian National Specialty in the Windsor, Ontario area, following our AMERICAN LHASA APSO CLUB 1991 National Specialty that is going to be held in suburban Detroit, Michigan.

I have been formally informed that LHASA APSO CANADA has NO PLANS to host such an event next year, and that the inquiries made to me, were made without the support of either the Executive or the club membership.

Visions of an international show weekend were unique, but they are not to be.

Respectfully,
Fred A Dieball

Dear National Breed Club President:

Trying to locate that special photograph for the cover of the Gazette can be a frustrating and sometimes futile experience. That's why we are turning to you for help.

The photograph needs to be of a breed that has not been recently featured on our cover. We can not use photographs of dogs that are being campaigned—preferably, the dog should be either retired or deceased, or a puppy which has not yet embarked on a show career. The dog must be an excellent representative of the breed. To meet the formatting requirements of the Gazette cover, the photo must be square, tending toward horizontal. The Gazette requires first time publishing rights to all photographs. We prefer color transparencies of dogs in natural poses (not stacked) in a seasonal outdoor setting. (Quality prints and studio shots with plain backdrops and no props are occasionally acceptable.) And, of course, the photograph should be well composed, with the dog in very sharp focus, with an attractive background and good contrast.

We are hopeful that all national breed clubs will be willing to work with us to acquire suitable photographs for future Gazette covers.

If you have any photographs that you wish to submit for consideration, please send them, along with a self-addressed stamped envelope, to Jeff Dorf, Photo Editor, Pure-Bred Dogs/American Kennel Gazette, 51 Madison Avenue, New York, NY 10010. Make sure that the name of the photographer, his address and social security number (for payment, should we decide to use the photograph) are attached to the transparency or print. Also, please include the breed of dog and the name, address and phone number of the individual to whom the photo should be returned. Should you have any further questions, you may contact Jeff Dorf at (212)695-8332.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,
Jeff Dorf
