Bandit steals Science Diet!
"THEIR THREATENING TACTICS"

Gun Dog Magazine writer Joel M. Vance, in the current issue, makes some interesting observations about so-called animal rights groups. He says keeping up with the gourdheads is kind of fun in a perverse way.

For example, he cites the theory that you can't call your dog a pet anymore. He is your companion animal. And you don't own him - that's a form of slavery.

He was disappointed to learn that a prominent vet and vice-president of the Humane Society of the United States thinks calling an animal a pet is "reminiscent of men's magazines that feature Pet of the Month" as a centerfold. Vance says: "It's too bad he's let his animal rights agenda slop over into what he knows best, which is the psychology of dogs and people and how they interact."

The writer also strongly attacks the fact that PETA had been listed as an agency eligible for United Way funds. He points out that you can, of course, specify the agencies toward which you want and don't want your dollars to go. But if you don't, it's divided equally among the groups...and can include PETA.

(Editor's Note: This story has been investigated by dog publications and agencies and was found to be true to the extent that legally it appeared to meet the guidelines. However, all local United Way organizations that have been contacted in cities across the country report that PETA is not on the lists of agencies to receive aid and will not be.)

Don Strand, a writer for Dog Watch, still suggests you write your Congressmen and tell them you question whether PETA qualifies for 501(c)(3) tax status, that you think it is a political advocacy group which does not meet the requirements for listing on the Combined Federal Campaign register of charities. Also, tell them that to get a specific, audit-based determination from the IRS as to the propriety of PETA's 501(c)(3) status and ask them to put PETA where you believe it belongs -- in a political advocacy and fund-raising group category.

Insist on an immediate acknowledgement of your letter and a follow-up report on the IRS investigation. Some Congressional representatives, by their responses, have shown their ignorance of or lack of concern for this issue. It would be good to know who they are.

WILL WE BE THE LAST GENERATION TO HAVE PETS?

We will be if animal rights organizations have their way. You and all other dog and cat owners need to be aware of the difference between animal rights versus animal welfare.

With this information, the next time an "animal interest" group asks you for donations, you will know if you are promoting a value system that puts animal rights ahead of your rights.

Animal Rights Groups

Believe that having a pet is slavery to the animal. They want to eradicate all pet ownership through breeding bans on all dogs and cats, cease all medical research and testing on animals, prohibit animal exhibitions such as zoos, circuses, dog, cat, and horse shows, and ban all use of animals as food (beef, chicken, pork, etc.) or as clothing (leather belts, shoes, wallets, etc.)

These groups include:

* People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)
* Animal Liberation Front (ALF)

Animal Welfare Groups

Want to reduce the number of homeless animals and promote humane treatment of animals, but do so by encouraging responsible pet ownership and public education.

These groups include:

* American Kennel Club (AKC) (919) 233-9787
* American Dog Owners Association (ADOA) (518) 477-8469
* Ga. Coalition of Dog Clubs (404) 985-6769

Dear ALAC Member:

By the time you receive this Bulletin, it may be year end. Therefore, I'd like to wish all ALAC members a healthy and happy 1993.

It's been "quiet" since my last message. I've only received one or two pieces of correspondence from the membership, so I am assuming that everyone is content! The power of positive thinking.

I mentioned in my last message that I was considering ways to shorten the Board meeting prior to our annual meeting. I suggested that we eliminate participation from the members attending. I have not heard any comments, either positive or negative. Can I assume that there are no objections?

We have tentatively scheduled a Board meeting for the Saturday or Sunday prior to the Westminster Kennel Club in February 1993. If there are members interested in attending, contact Amy Andrews or myself a couple of weeks prior to the meeting for exact time and place.

As some of you may know, I am the Roster Chairperson. I maintain all names, addresses and telephone numbers on my personal computer and then when labels are requested, I forward a disc to either Susan Giles or Amy Andrews to print the labels and forward to the person requesting them. I've never been too successful at printing them myself. At any rate, I want to explain a problem I have with most changes. When we receive them from the post office with your new address label noted, it does not include a new telephone number. It stands to reason, as they have no idea of what it is. I would like to ask each and every member who moves, to please take the time to forward a change of address to the club secretary along with their new telephone number. Otherwise, we are going to have your correct address in the handbook, but not a current telephone listing. Keeping the roster up to date requires a lot of work and I'm asking the membership to please advise us of any changes. Thanks.

I received a letter addressed to the American Kennel Club concerning the situation of Ruth Deck. It was sent by one of our local specialty clubs. I was truly impressed with the sincerity and thoroughness of the letter. I would urge any member of ALAC who has known Ruth and can offer any support to write to the American Kennel Club, Attn: Mr. Paul R. Flirtig, Control #9203330. Ruth is a past President of ALAC and a lifetime honorary member. I understand that she has been ill and I personally send her my regards for a speedy recovery. If anyone has any questions, or would like additional information, please give me a call.

Again, a Happy Holiday Season.

Stephen G.C. Campbell, ALAC President

Futurity Report

Judges for the 1993 Futurities will be as follows:

- REGION 1 - Carmen Spears
- REGION 2 - Janet Whitman
- REGION 3 - Amy Andrews
- REGION 4 - Julie Elliot

In conjunction with the National Specialty
Cascade Lhasa Apso Club
Greater Detroit Lhasa Apso Club
Heart of America Lhasa Apso Club with the help of the new Oklahoma Lhasa Club

CANDIDATES PROFILE INSTITUTE

1993 will be the first year ALAC will utilize the Candidates Profile. The profile is basically a resume, limited to 250 words or less, which will introduce the candidate to the members and give them a brief history of experience and areas of expertise. The profile follows a guideline which will be published in the Bulletin, and a copy of which will be sent to the candidates along with their nomination acceptance form. Candidates wishing to participate will send their profile back to the club secretary along with their signed acceptance form so it can be included with the ballot mailing. Nominations from the floor will follow the same procedure.

It is hoped that the use of the profile will be the fairest and most equitable way for each candidate to get qualifications, ideas, and abilities to the attention of the membership.

“Do you have a stud dog?” were the first words out of the person’s mouth as I answered the phone one Sunday afternoon. How many times had I heard that question asked and how many times have I had to spend the next 30 to 60 minutes of my time explaining why this person shouldn’t be breeding their beloved pet, part of the job of being a responsible breeder I tell myself as I hang up, thoroughly in disgust. Why must a stud owner be responsible for giving advice on breeding (or not) a female? The answer is simple: THE BREEDER HASN’T DONE THEIR JOB! Why are so many females being sold to total novices without limited registration AKC papers, four generation pedigrees and other breed information? One would think all of these puppies are sold by pet shops but that’s simply not the case. The last five stud inquiry calls I’ve had have been puppies from one litter, located near my area, purchased from a well-meaning woman who tells me she has a lovely bitch that she only breeds to champion dogs. She has had three litters in four years from this bitch, none of them have been sold with a spay/neuter agreement (in fact she didn’t know what I was talking about), she did not supply them with a pedigree, sales contract, nutritional or training information nor did she give them names or numbers where they could get more information about their breed. She told me she always found lovely homes for her puppies and that she enjoyed having puppies and thought that others should also have that pleasure. She was totally unaware that there is a Standard of Perfection for the breed and that deliveries sometimes result in C-sections. Although this breeder is a definite part of the overpopulation problem, there are four stud owners (remember they all owned champions and are not novices) who are also contributing to the problems facing the purebred dog world today. Why in the world would you offer your champion stud dog to a person who wants puppies for the pleasure of having puppies? That’s a sure sign that they need new living room furniture. Why would a stud owner help someone like that create new specimens of the breed when they don’t even know what they’re breeding, haven’t had the necessary diagnostic testing done on their bitch (x-rays, eye certification, etc.) or have a clue about the overpopulation problems facing our nation. That doesn’t mean that no one should have a litter or that your stud dog shouldn’t be used in a breeding program.

It does mean, however, that you and your stud dog could become the catalyst for many generations of unplanned puppies. Every long-time dog fancier can tell you horror stories about how some of their stock has ended up in puppy mills living a horrible existence. This cycle is impossible to break without the combined efforts of not only the breeder but the stud owner. Take a minute to fairly evaluate the reasons you’re offering your dog at stud. Is he a superior specimen of the breed with a pedigree to match? Has he come through all diagnostic testing with flying colors or are parts of his gene make-up a little questionable? Many breeders finish male dogs only to neuter them and place them in pet homes. I applaud these people who enjoy their sport but keep in mind that not all show dogs are breeding dogs. It takes a lot of courage to admit that your favorite bed dog is not the #1 stud of the country. In other words, the few hundred dollars of income generated by your stud fee could be the means by which another pet shop or puppy mill is supplied with adorable, cute, wiggly babies. People don’t tell the truth and learn the correct responses after talking to a breeder or two. Make sure that the bitch owner you’re dealing with understands all the consequences of having a litter—good and bad: that they require all pets produced in the litter to be sold on spay/neuter or AKC limited registrations; insist that you see the litter before they are sold; offer them all the help and guidance they will accept especially in the placement of each of the puppies. Don’t simply take your stud fee and run, hoping that all turns out well. Feel and act on your responsibility to the breed.

OVERCOMING CAR (MOTORHOME) SICKNESS

Car sickness is a form of motion sickness that is caused by excessive, uneven, rhythmic motion in a car. Some doctors say this malady is caused by motion's effect on the labyrinths of the inner ear, but many other factors can bring on motion sickness. In humans, car sickness can be caused by smells and odors, physical discomfort, unsanitary conditions, suggestion, and fear. Fear has a decided effect on the dog. Psychosomatic illnesses in dogs have been well documented in veterinary literature. In severe cases, merely putting a dog in a parked car will cause salivation. Car sickness cannot always be cured by humans. This may be true with some dogs; but we have never experienced it to be so.

The initial manifestation of car sickness in dogs is often an excessive amount of salivation. This is often-but not always-followed by retching and vomiting. The presence of food in the dog's stomach may increase the likelihood of car sickness. Even with only the discomfort of salivation, the dog's appearance would be sickly. He would neither be ready for the show ring nor a visit to Aunt Judy's.

Every ride for the dog should not end up with an inoculation at the veterinarian's office or tedious plucking at the grooming salon. These factors would certainly increase the incidence of psychosomatic car sickness.

The standard method for combatting motion sickness in humans is to give Dramamine before the onset of the symptoms. Dramamine will cause extreme drowsiness and is unsatisfactory as a cure for dogs. The show fancier cannot arrive ready to enter his dogs in the ring if they have been given this medication. It is equally unsatisfactory for the average dog owner who wants to make his dog a true part of the family and take him along on outings.

The "sink or swim" method is not the best approach. In this method, you would take the dog out driving until the problem is cured. This is hard on the dog and on the humans who have to clean up after him. The following steps are designed to give dog owners with car sick dogs a minimum amount of work. Some of the steps can be followed when you are going out in the car anyway. If your dog is responding well, you can skip some steps and proceed more rapidly. It will depend upon how severe the problem is. Proceed when your dog seems blase with the present step.

1) Put your dog in your parked car. Praise him, pet him, reassure him. Make him feel it's a party. Do not start the motor. After a few minutes, take him for a walk and then home. Do this twice a day for a few days.

2) Take Fido out to dinner...that is, out of the house and into your car. At his normal feeding time, put him in the car and give him his chow. After a few tries, leave the car and let him eat there alone. Come back, praise him and walk him as soon as he finishes eating. If he won't eat with you gone, take your favorite magazine (Lhasa Bulletin) and keep him company. Try this for one week.

3) Now put Fido in the car, turn your engine on, make sure the window is cracked so that he has air and talk to him. Tell him "The Three Bears," shut off the motor, and take him out. Always praise him for sitting in the car.

4) Increase your warm up—motor on, car parked. Tell him a longer story. Praise and go home.

5) Time for a spin. Proceed as above and go for a very short ride. Talk to him reassure him, praise him when you get home. Do this for a few days.

6) Now you can start to take Fido on your short errands. When running out to the drugstore or for the Sunday papers, take him for a ride. When you get to your destination, take him with you. Tell him he's terrific—and drive him home. If he begins to salivate while you're driving, pull over and stop for a few minutes. Then proceed. A nice walk before the trip home will relax him and make it all worthwhile for him as well. He'll look forward to the next journey.

7) Continue slowly until you can take him on longer and longer trips.

FINAL TIPS

- Don't feed your dog before you work with him in the car. Except when feeding him in the car, let him look forward to dinner immediately after the lesson.
- Always leave the window open for enough fresh air but NOT enough for him to jump out.
- As he progresses so that he can go for short runs, take him whenever you can...on chores, for a short visit to friends, for a fill-up at the gas station. Work his rides into your normal routine whenever possible. Happy motoring!

BLUE LIKES SCIENCE DIET
Dogs don't misbehave out of spite. An annoying or destructive habit may simply be normal or learned behavior that your dog doesn't know is wrong.

Before you lose patience, try to understand why your dog is misbehaving. Then you can figure out a constructive way to change his actions. Enrolling your dog in a basic obedience course is one of the best ways to prevent bad habits. It's also a good idea to talk to your veterinarian.

CHEWING

Dogs chew on things because they're teething, lonely, or bored.

Solutions:

- Give a teething puppy something to chew on, such as a twisted wet washcloth that's been in the freezer. The ice will help numb his sore gums.
- Provide plenty of sturdy chew toys.
- Help your dog use up excess energy. Play or practice obedience commands with him daily.
- Don't confuse your dog by giving him an old shoe or sock to play with. He can't discriminate between his toy and other shoes and socks.
- Say "NO!" and give your dog's collar a gentle but firm shake. Do this when you catch him chewing an object that is off-limits.
- Don't reprimand your dog once the damage is done. A dog's memory is too short for him to know what made him angry.
- Make the forbidden object taste bad. Spray the object with a commercial aversion product or water mixed with a harsh-tasting substance such as Tabasco or Listerine.

BEGGING

Dogs beg because they've learned they'll be fed or because they want to be included in the social aspects of a meal. Dogs who beg may also have an inadequate diet, an irregular feeding schedule, or a need for more attention.

Solutions:

- Don't ever feed your dog from the table. In fact, don't even let him near the table while you eat. If you give him table food, feed it to him in his dish at his regular mealtime.
- Make sure your dog's diet is nutritionally complete and balanced.
- Keep your dog on a regular feeding schedule. From weaning to 6 months, feed him three times a day. From 6 to 12 months, feed him twice a day. By the time he's 1 year old, one meal a day will keep him well fed.
- Play with your dog. Begging may be his bid for more attention.
Even a windy day can't stop MARLON from breezing by to a 4 point Best of Winners. Thank you Mrs Jean Lepley.

BARKING OR HOWLING
Dogs use their voices to protect their territories, protest confinement, announce physical needs, or relieve anxiety or boredom.

Solutions:

- Make sure your dog can't see strange dogs and passerby. To prevent territorial barking, keep your dog away from windows or behind a fence that he can't see through.
- Check your dog's needs. Does he have the food, water, and shade or warmth that he requires?
- Don't fuss over your dog before you go out of the house. Leave him alone for at least 15 minutes before your departure so he won't notice your absence as much.
- Train your dog not to bark or howl. Try leaving him alone in a room for a short time. If he barks, go back in and say "NO!" or shake him by the collar. Repeat the exercise until he's quiet; then reward him with praise and a treat.
- Exercise your dog every day; sometimes he's barking just to release pent-up energy.
- Say "NO!" when your dog barks. If he's on a leash, give it a quick, firm jerk. Praise him when he stops barking.

SOILING
Sometimes poorly trained dogs have accidents. But a well-trained dog's accidents may reflect a change in the household, an irregular schedule, or illness.

Solutions

- Don't scold your dog after the fact. He won't understand why you're angry.
- Take your dog for a checkup. he may have a physical, dietary, or emotional problem.
- Retrain your dog. Feed him at the same time each day and walk him 30 minutes after he eats. If your dog is less than 2 years old, confine him to a crate or a small area with a dog gate whenever you're away for a few hours. It's instinctual for dogs to seek a small den for safety. And they're less likely to soil an area they can't get away from. Be sure to leave fresh water and food and a rug or blanket in the bottom of the crate. Review your methods with the veterinarian.

FEARING PEOPLE
Some shy dogs are naturally timid, but some become fearful through abuse or neglect.

Solutions

- Train your dog. It's instinctual for a dog to obey a dominate leader, even a human one. Establishing limits makes him feel secure around strangers.
- Ask your dog to sit and stay while an unfamiliar person sits quietly at a distance. Praise your pet for his calm and give him a treat. Gradually ask the stranger to move closer. Stop the session while the dog is still quiet and continue on another day.
- Don't shout at your dog.
- Avoid comforting your timid dog. Reassuring pats will only reward is anxious behavior.

BITING

Dogs snap because of a desire to be dominant or a genetic tendency to be aggressive. An injured or nervous dog is also likely to bite.

Solutions:

- Check for an injury. Even a friendly dog will snap as a natural reflex if he’s in pain.
- Avoid rough or teasing games.
- Train your dog. A dog who obeys a range of commands will be less likely to bite out of fear.
- If you have a newborn puppy, start handling him when he’s 2 weeks old. With a few minutes of gentle contact each day, he’ll get used to people.
- Don’t keep your dog away from people. This only increases his anxiety around strangers.

CHASING CARS

Moving objects, such as cars, set off a dog’s prey-chasing instinct.

Solutions:

- Leash or fence your dog.
- Jerk his leash sharply and shout “NO!” every time he starts to chase a car.
- Teach your dog to sit and stay.

FIGHTING

Dogs fight to establish their dominance or to protect their territory.

Solutions:

- Fence or leash your dog.
- If a dog approaches with his teeth bared or back arched, move your dog away slowly.
- Don’t get into the middle of a dogfight; you’re likely to get bitten. Dump water on the dogs or cover their heads with a blanket or coat.

A wide variety of disorders involve the reproductive tract of the female dog. Clinical signs may or may not be evident depending on the specific disorder and the extent to which the problem has progressed. Although some gynecological problems are relatively benign and can be corrected easily, others are life-threatening. The purpose of this article is to discuss specifically gynecological disorders of the bitch, excluding medical problems related to pregnancy, whelping or postpartum.

OVARIANS

Ovarian Cysts (fluid filled sacs) are commonly found in older dogs. Most are small and cause no clinical signs. They may be noted as an incidental finding during an ovariohysterectomy. During a physical examination, a large cyst may be palpated within the abdomen. In such cases, it is critical to differentiate the cyst from a tumor or diseased kidney. If the cyst is functional (secreting hormones), hormone-induced changes in the uterus can occur, resulting in an increased incidence for the development of pyometra (pus-filled uterus) an ovariohysterectomy is advised for a bitch with cystic ovaries. Both ovaries are removed during the spay procedure even if only one is cystic.

Ovarian tumors in the dog are rare, accounting for approximately 0.5 percent to 1.2 percent of all canine neoplasms, and for 6.25 percent of tumors in the intact bitch. In contrast, each year ovarian cancer claims the lives of about 11,000 women living in the U.S., and is the leading cause of death in American women resulting from a gynecologic malignancy. The average age of the dog diagnosed with an ovarian tumor is 8 years.

Symptoms vary depending on the type and size of the ovarian tumor. Hormonal imbalances may occur, resulting in vaginal bleeding. Lethardly and depression may be present. Gastrointestinal disturbances may result if the tumor causes pressure on the intestinal tract. Clinical signs may not be evident until the tumor has increased significantly in size.

In women, various factors are liked to the cause of ovarian tumor development. The suppression of ovulation which occurs during pregnancy and lactation and with the use of birth control pills seems to have a significant preventive effect. The presence of a carcinogen in the peritoneal cavity (i.e., talcum powder used as part of perineal hygiene or asbestos exposure) has also been suggested as a possible factor in ovarian tumor formation in women.

Although the cause of ovarian tumors in the bitch is not well understood, experimental administration of DES (diethylstilbesterol) has resulted in malignant ovarian adenocarcinoma in dogs. It is known that the Bulldog has a high incidence of ovarian tumors of granulosa or thecal cell origin.

A diagnosis of ovarian tumor is achieved through abdominal palpation, abdominal radiographs and ultrasound. Exploratory surgery may be required to give a definitive diagnosis. Ovariohysterectomy is the primary treatment for ovarian tumors. Any involved surrounding tissues are removed as well. Chemotherapy and radiation therapy may be beneficial to treat residual tumor following surgery.

Although the prognosis for benign ovarian tumors is excellent, the prognosis for malignant ovarian tumors is often poor. A diagnosis often is not made until the tumor is advanced. Symptoms are often vague and metastasis has frequently occurred before treatment is initiated.

Uterus

Cystic endometrial hyperplasia is a condition in which the uterine tissue has a marked response to the effects of progesterone. The initial progesterone stimulation may result from elevated hormonal progesterone levels during the estrous cycle or following the administration of progesterone. The incidence of CEH increases with age.

CEH results in a thickening of the endometrium and the formation of mucus within the uterus. Increased glandular secretions may result in an accumulation of fluid or mucus in the uterus, called hydrometra or mucometra. Both uterine horns or only sections of the horns may be affected.

affected. Abdominal distention can result from the increase in the size of the uterus, and a mucoid vaginal discharge may develop. Infertility can result. The uterus is more susceptible to infection while under the effects of progesterone; consequently, bacterial infections may follow. Ovariectomy is recommended.

Pyometra is a hormonally influenced uterine disorder resulting from the interaction of an abnormal endometrium and bacteria. A pyometra is often preceded by CEH, which has resulted in a thickened endometrium and an accumulation of fluid and mucus within the uterus. Bacteria may ascend into the uterus from the vagina during estrus, contaminating the mucus-filled uterus. Progesterone tends to inhibit the ability of the uterus to resist infection. The combination of these factors greatly predisposes the bitch to the development of pyometra. Estrogens administered during estrus or diestrus (in a mismate shot) increase the risk of pyometra because they enhance the effects of progesterone on the uterus.

Pyometra most commonly occurs in bitches 8 to 10 years old; however, pyometra may occur in bitches as young as 1 to 3 years if exogenous estrogens have been administered. Symptoms usually appear within 10 weeks after a heat cycle. The symptoms may be nonspecific and include increased thirst, excessive urination, nausea, vomiting and depression. If the cervix is open, a blood-tinged or purulent vaginal discharge occurs. If the cervix is closed, a vaginal discharge will not occur, but the abdomen distends due to the enlarged uterus. The effects of pyometra are not limited to the uterus. Chronic cases can result in bone marrow depression and anemia. Kidney disease and liver damage can also develop. Septicemia (blood poisoning) may ensue in bitches severely affected with pyometra.

A diagnosis may be achieved through the bitch’s history of a recent heat cycle or mismate shot, clinical signs and an abnormal white blood cell count. A normal, non-pregnant uterus is not usually identifiable on an abdominal radiograph or ultrasound; however, the enlarged uterus associated with pyometra may be recognized by radiography or ultrasonography.

Ovariectomy is the treatment of choice for pyometra, unless the reproductive capability of the bitch is to be salvaged. Intravenous fluids and antibiotics may be required to stabilize the bitch before surgery. Antibiotics are continued for several days after surgery.

Medical therapy without surgery involves the administration of prostaglandins, which cause the uterus to contract and thereby expel the uterine contents. Prostaglandins are not legally approved for use in the bitch (editor's emphasis: Although they have been used successfully in some cases, their use at this time is experimental).

Patients not recommended for prostaglandin therapy include bitches older than 8 years, or those not intended for reproductive purposes: severely ill animals, because a clinical response may not be apparent for 48 hours; and bitches with closed-cervix pyometra, because of the increased risk of uterine rupture or expulsion of uterine contents into the abdomen. Prostaglandins should not be administered to pregnant bitches because abortion may result. Their use is also contraindicated in pregnant bitches with mummified fetuses because of the increased risk of tearing the uterine wall.

Antibiotics are used concurrently with prostaglandin therapy and continued for several days. The bitch must be monitored closely to make certain that she is improving clinically, the uterus is expelling its contents via a vaginal discharge and the uterus is decreasing in size.

Precautions should be taken with bitches that developed pyometra secondary to CEH or were treated successfully with prostaglandins. Dr. Donald Lien of Cornell University recommends those bitches be bred on the next heat cycle following prostaglandin therapy, because pyometra may recur in future non-pregnant cycles. Vaginal cultures and antibiotic therapy may be considered before the next breeding. Artificial insemination and antibiotics may be used in those bitches susceptible to post-coital infections.

The incidence of uterine tumors in the bitch is very low, accounting for only 0.4 percent of all canine tumors. Benign tumors (including leiomyomas) as well as malignant tumors (leiomyosarcomas) do occur. Ovariectomy is the recommended treatment, yielding a good prognosis for benign tumors. Malignant uterine tumors have a more guarded prognosis due to the invasive nature of the tumor and possibility of metastatic disease elsewhere in the body by the time a diagnosis is made.

Lesson Learned in King County
The Progress of Animal Rights Legislation
by Lee Wallot

A year and a half after it was first introduced we finally have a resolution regarding the breeding ban and spay/neuter ordinance that was introduced by PAWS (Progressive Animal Welfare Society) through councilman Ron Sims. While some people will try to tell you we won, the truth of the matter is that we lost in King County and we lost big.

Some will say we don’t have a breeding ban but the reality is that the infamous “target” euthanasia rates are still in the ordinance. No matter how reasonable those targets may appear, we fully expect them to be reached based solely on the two items of skyrocketing cat population, both domestic and feral, and the lack of a county-wide leash law, both problems the ordinance doesn’t even address. When the targets are reached, a breeding moratorium can be put into effect by a simple vote of the council, with no public hearing.

Some people will say we do not have a breeding license; actually what we have is a change in terminology. The same fee is still in effect ($55) only now they call it an “unaltered license fee”; altered license fee is $10.

Other provisions are:
1) Puppies and kittens must be licensed at 4 weeks of age (You read it right - 4 weeks)
2) No advertising any dog or cat for sale without publication of the dog/cat license number
3) Mandatory rabies vaccination of all dogs and cats (There has never been such a mandatory program in Washington, probably due to the fact that there have been only 3 cases of rabies in a dog or cat in the last 30 years and one in the last 10 years. This mandate is obviously not for the health of the animal but will be used as a tracking device.
4) Anyone selling or giving away a dog or cat must notify the Dept. of Animal Control in writing of the new owner’s name, address and phone number. The ordinance is 25 pages long and impossible to cover in more detail here but this should give you some idea of the invasiveness of its rulings.

What happened in King County? I hope this article will enable other communities to avoid the mistakes made here. To begin with, we strongly feel the ordinance as originally introduced should never have been modified. It was a carbon copy of San Mateo’s original ordinance and was so fraught with problems we feel it could either have been defeated outright or, if enacted, could have been defeated in a court of law. It must be remembered, however, that there was a panic situation in King County. The King County ordinance came on the heels of San Mateo and in the shock waves that followed, a group of people went to Ron Sims and requested permission to set up a task force to offer changes to the ordinance that Sims would agree with. This was mistake #1. The task force (coalition) was set up for the purpose of compromise. It has been proven over and over again: When you negotiate with the animal rights movement, you lose. As time has gone by, it has become painfully clear, that in those areas where we stand up and yell one loud, unified voice “NO!!”, we have won. In those instances where we have tried to do the “right” thing and come to a common ground of understanding, we have lost.

In King County, PAWS very effectively used what historians call “The Radical Flank Effect”; it is a phenomena that has been used by social movements throughout history and is one of the reasons for the success so far of the animal rights movement. It is important to understand how this Radical Flank Effect works and why it succeeds.

To begin with, the activists introduce an idea, a concept, or legislation that is so radical and unbelievable it arouses instant, outraged response in all those people it will affect. In the case of the animal rights movement, the big stick was a breeding ban and mandatory spay/neuter ordinance. Predictably, it roused fear, panic and anger. But the world is made up of mostly moderate people...those who believe in the democratic way of life, of negotiating a problem to come up with solutions that are suitable for all. And so the moderates work hard to compromise. What is overlooked in all this is that those wield...

ing the big stick are immediately the ones in control; they have nothing to lose because they came into this with nothing; but the moderates, the negotiators, have everything to lose because they are the ones that are trying to keep something from being taken away.

In the case of animal rights legislation, when a compromise is finally reached, the moderate middle will find itself having given some of its rights and the radical animalists will have won a victory. The compromise has actually shifted the moderate center ever so slightly toward the radical’s ultimate goal. what most people don’t realize is that the “compromise” is what the animalists had hoped for all along. The radical original demands had been introduced only as a starting point from which they were willing to back down to get their real goals into law. And, in accepting the compromise, the moderate majority have not won by getting the breeding bans defeated, they have lost by allowing the introduction and approval of coercive legislation that already takes away some of their rights and is set up to take away even more in the future. The Radical Flank Effect has worked throughout history; it worked in King County, WA. However, this maneuvering would not have worked without several other steps also working in unison with it. If anyone out there is under the impression that we are dealing with a wildeyed band of fanatics who only know how to look ridiculous, think again. The leaders of this movement are extremely dangerous. They are dangerous because they understand human nature and the formation of public opinion, and are adept at using it against us. They are media-wise and are able to focus all media attention on themselves and their message to the point of shutting out opposing views or at least casting their opposition in very unfavorable light. In King County we were not able to get our side’s viewpoint to the public through either newspapers or TV coverage.

The time it took the task force to come to a resolution (a year and a half), also gave PAWS a perfect opportunity to carry out a propaganda campaign that effectively cast every breeder as part of a money-hungry, selfish, self-interest group who cared nothing about the poor kittens and puppies being killed at the shelter. The campaign was synchronized to be ever-growing in its emotional impact on the general public. To begin with, PAWS inundated the newspapers with letters telling about the horrific problem of millions of dying dogs and cats. This immediately generated TV coverage as Seattle area residents were “educated” about what PAWS depicted the problem to be. Then came the now famous direct mail circular about “Buster and Tiffany”. On the cover is a picture of a cute puppy kitten; inside they are dead. Then came a very PAWS-slanted article in the Sunday magazine section of the Seattle Times, featuring a quarter page photo of a tiny kitten being euthanized. All you see is a hand holding the kitten in the air and the other hand plunging a hypodermic needle into the kitten’s belly. Then came the ads in all the newspapers showing barrels of dead dogs and cats. And finally, just before the ordinance was to be voted on, PAWS did a TV saturation campaign showing the actual euthanasia of a very appealing dog. It was a pornographically horrific campaign - and it worked. But it never would have been successful if we hadn’t given them the time they needed to build to its climax. Nero fiddled while Rome burned? The task force negotiated while PAWS ignited the emotions of the uninformed people of King County.

Time also worked against us as far as the ordinance itself was concerned. PAWS had time to rework the language, to make it sound more people-friendly, to make it more difficult to defeat in a legal sense. The ordinance was changed at least four times, each time becoming more convoluted and polished yet remaining essentially the same. PAWS was very proud of the fact that 16 lawyers worked on their final version.

Sims also used the very existence of the task force against us. Last year I wrote an open letter to the task force warning that we should also be exploring other alternatives rather than relying solely on the task force recommendations. I said, “No matter what you come up with, I do not believe Mr. Sims will accept it as a whole. He may, however, decide to use bits and pieces of it to make the ordinance more palatable and may even claim this is what the breeders want.” The Seattle Times coverage of the ordinance’s passage says, “The ordinance is based on recommendations of a coalition of people representing animal welfare and breeders organizations”. Sims and PAWS did exactly what I warned they might do; they took bits and pieces of the task force recommendations and incorporated them into their ordinance; then Mr. Sims continually insisted...

DIET FOR ILL PETS

Prescription Diet pet food is formulated for critically sick, injured dogs and cats. It is designed to meet the needs of a debilitated patient, which include altered energy requirements, immune system protection and wound healing. The food contains increased energy-dense fats and proteins, amino and fatty acids required in hypermetabolism (a state of high stress), citrates to promote normal blood and urine pH and enhanced amounts of zinc. Its puddinglike texture allows food to be given through a syringe, if needed.

his ordinance came from the coalition and was “what the breeders wanted”. And the council believed him. The task force had expected the animalists to “fight fair” and were stunned when they found out they were negotiating with a movement that thrives on gutter warfare.

Yet another reason for our defeat was the task force itself. It rapidly became clear that anyone not agreeing with what the task force was doing was immediately branded “the enemy”. In hindsight it is obvious that PAWS wanted the task force to be formed; it was the perfect solution to their dilemma of how to “divide and conquer”. Universally, task forces seem to take on a separate life of their own; the animalists were astutely aware of this facet of human nature and used it effectively against us. From the very onset, the task force (of which PAWS was a member) shut out everyone they were supposed to represent and concentrated on coming up with what they considered to be “right” with no outside suggestions. All meetings were closed to the public; no information was ever made available as to what was being discussed; all suggestions, unless they came from the coalition itself, were ignored. Then, when the finished package was presented to the breeders, we were essentially asked to rubber-stamp it in approval. Then we tried to warn the breeders that Mr. Sims might not accept the coalition suggestions and that we should be preparing other forms of action in addition to the task force package, we were effectively silenced. We were denied permission to address people who attended, even when we were willing to do it outside, after the meeting, in the parking lot. The only voice heard was that of the task force assuring the breeders, “We have the answer. Don’t rock the boat. We are taking care of everything.” The breeders obeyed. Why not? Somebody else was taking care of everything for them.

Unity. It is the key. There must be unity among all of us or else we are defeated before we begin. There cannot be two or three or four or more different organizations, all working separately. Having said this, let me emphasize this does not mean several organizations should not be working together. In numbers there is strength and that old cliche of “united we stand, divided we fall” was so clearly demonstrated in this instance that we must learn from it. There is no one way to fight this insidious legislation. The opponents...that’s US, folks, have to work together. There is NO place for “my way is the only way” in this battle.

Also, the animal rights organizations are clearly bonded together on this issue and they are reconciled to a long battle. This issue will not be settled in a few short years. We must recognize this as well. We don’t want to. I’m sure most of us would much rather have the whole thing just go away and let us get back to living our own lives. It’s not going to happen though and the sooner we realize this, the better our chances of winning become. Either get involved and do something or else get prepared to eventually give up your way of life.

Some other things that must be done: The general public must be educated about what the animal rights movement is really all about. The animalists will eventually expose themselves as they did here. In the beginning, PAWS firmly denied that they were part of the animal rights movement but by the end they were proudly claiming their true orientation. Of course, this would have been great for us if the public had been aware of what the animal rights hidden agenda was all about but, in fact, it did us little good because we lacked the money and the people to get the message to the public. We wouldn’t have needed a lot and we believed the show clubs were going to help us. We had not counted on being made the enemy by our own people. The promises of help never came through. The AKC could have helped if they had in place a program such as that of the CFA (Cat Fanciers Associations) that gives matching funds to any members actively fighting the animal rights movement. But no such help was available for us and our own personal finances would stretch no further. In order to win, you must be committed to helping in all ways: financial, emotional and physical. Without the participation of everybody, the battle is most assuredly lost. We must also take a page from the activists’ handbook and get involved politically. I know. That word “politics” gives almost all of us a bad taste in the mouth, but it is a fact of life. The animalists have chosen the political arena and this is where we have to fight them. A simple thing weighed heavily against us, no matter how much we’d like to think it shouldn’t have, we were also defeated by letters and phone calls and petitions. The animalists are experts in this field of supporting their cause. All through the campaign, we heard over and over again about the thousands of letters and phone calls.

I must also mention that even if you do not have an animal rights ordinance being introduced in your town right now, do not make the mistake of thinking it will not happen. It will eventually hit us all. It’s only a matter of time. Those of you without active ordinances already being proposed are in a unique position...you can get to the public, to the councilmen, to your legislators before the animal rights people do. Educate. Educate. Use the AKC education program...it’s a good one...but do not think telling everyone about how wonderful it is to have dogs in our lives will, by itself, stop the onslaught of anti-dog legislation.

We must also educate about the legislation that might be proposed, about what its repercussions will be, about what the 12 steps of the animal rights agenda really mean. We must get to know our legislators and we must keep informed as to legislation that might cross their desks. We must do this personally, each and every one of us. You cannot expect “somebody else to do it”. It is a battle we all have got to fight together.

Also, do not make the mistake of thinking the laws are so ridiculous that they are unenforceable anyhow, so why bother? In fact, the very unenforceability of the ordinance is one of the things the animal rights leaders are counting on. King County’s ordinance might look pretty appealing to anyone not familiar with the animal rights movement. A legislator in your area could be swayed to accept it “because it was formulated by a coalition of welfare and breeder organizations in King County because everybody wanted it”. Don’t make the mistake of thinking the animalists in your area won’t use exactly that tactic. They will, Kim Sturla, formerly of the Peninsula Humane Society in San Mateo and now with Fund For Animals, worked closely with PAWS on the introduction of the King County ordinance and, over the past year, she has been very busy preparing the ground work for similar ordinances all across the country. However, whether it is enforced right now or not is immaterial to the movement’s ultimate plan; in fact, the ordinance is actually designed to fail. But a legislator in your area won’t know this. We must realize that the goal of the animalists is to get the laws in place and this is what they are doing across the country. In a few years, when they are in place, that is when the animal rights leaders will stand up and demand: “look, we waited all this time for other ideas to work. Now it’s time to enforce those laws and to put the teeth into them that we originally wanted.” That’s when the sledge hammer of breeding bans will be added to the ordinances and the hammer will drop all across the country at the same time in a well-synchronized orchestration of oppression. We must stop them now. We must learn the lessons that were taught in San Mateo and King County. We cannot compromise. We cannot negotiate. We have a right to say NO. We have heard over and over again: “This politician or that politician says we have got to have a law for this reason or that reason”. Just because a politician says we are going to have a law, or a change in one, does not mean that we, the people, have to agree that he is right and give him the law he wants. We are the people. If we feel a law is not fair and just and needed, we don’t have to allow that politician to bully it through just because he wants it. The politicians are supposed to be working for us. We can defeat these ordinances by saying “NO!!”.

WHY NOT BE LIKE AVIS?

by Denny Kodner

There are so many No. 1’s these days, it’s really laughable. I had read one magazine the other day that had two - No. 1 Afgans, two - No. 1 Dobermans and no less than three - Number 1 Boxers. Besides all that, it had two top winning something or other of all time along with three dogs that claimed to be the number one Herding dog.

After a while all this ceases to be even laughable and becomes really boring. However, when I was thumbing thru a German Shepherd magazine and came across a claim by somebody who possessed, of all things, the most major reserves of the year - I just pitched the magazine in disgust.

It would be truly refreshing - even if it’s not really original - for someone to be like Avis - be number two but try harder. If nothing else - try harder to find something different to say about YOU number one whatever breed it is.

SO WHY NOT BE LIKE AVIS? JUST TRY HARDER! (DOG NEWS, October 9, 1992)

We would like to take this time to wish all of our LHASA friends a Wonderful Christmas and the Best New Year possible. We also send thanks to those of you who supported us through the past year. May the next year be prosperous for all.

We are extremely proud to have finished three champions since October, 1991—OWNER-HANDLED all the way!!

Ch. Barbil’s Tao Shanti O’Serenity

Our first champion at Barbil was our little RED girl, Shanti. As her name TAO means THE WAY TO PROCEED, she has been bred and expects puppies in December.

Marcus was our second champion at Barbil. He is now the residing Stud at home. He congratulates his half-sister, BUBBLES, on her recent championship. THAT MAKES TWO FOR MOM!!

BUBBLES BOUNCES for SCIENCE DIET
The Lhasa apso is gay and assertive, independent and stubborn. He has a clown-like personality with a wonderful sense of humor and makes a great companion. However, occasionally careless breeding, as with any breed, can lead to temperament problems.

The alarm clock on Saturday morning brought the sound of seven happy Lhasa Apsos stirring, anxiously waiting for "mom" and "dad" to greet them and let them outside in their run for their morning constitutional. They were so excited they were torn between jumping up and playing with us, or running outside. Oh what a joy happy dogs can be!

Lhasa number eight, however, was no where to be seen — as usual. We went to the front room where he was sound asleep on the day bed, oblivious to the fun and games going on among his buddies. We said, "Barney, it's time to get up." No response. We repeated the phrase somewhat louder. This time we saw his body stiffen and he lifted his head slowly off the pillow as he glared at us, growling. It was time to get tough with the first command of the day: "Barney, OFF!" It took three or four commands, but he eventually jumped off the bed and walked stiffly toward the door, growling the entire time.

After a long walk down the hall and into the kitchen, he stopped again. "Barney, OUTSIDE!" More growling. "Barney, OUT!" He stiffly walked toward the door and walked outside, still growling. Once outside, he walked around the perimeter of the privacy fence, marking where any other dog had been. During his walk one of our six month old puppies came within six feet of him and startled him. Barney turned his head to the side so he would not make eye contact with the pup. When the puppy pursued him, Barney snapped, only to be reprimanded by the puppy's mom. Barney ran from the puppy and the angry mom, and came back inside where he could seek solace under the kitchen table.

Once under the table, Barney stood his ground in his typical no-nonsense fashion. I moved a chair out so I could sit down, and he attacked it viciously. I tried to move the chair out of his reach, and he chased it across the room, attempting to latch on. I gave Barney a "DOWN" command, and he ignored me as if I hadn't said a word. I gave him a second command. "Barney, DOWN!" He looked at the floor, slowly dropped down on his elbows and eventually made his way to the floor, growling and snarling the entire way down.

It was clearly medication time for Barney. (NOTE: The above scenario took place for observation only. Barney is typically medicated before he interacts with others.)

The Magic Pill
I took a piece of soft cheese from the refrigerator and put a small capsule in the cheese. I flattened my hand out and offered him the morsel, and he grabbed it off my hand. Since he knew one piece was his limit, he left and went back to his "station" under the kitchen table. He continued to growl every time man or beast walked by, although he made no effort to move toward any of the other dogs. They just walked on by — they knew Barney harbored no ill will toward them. Daisy even retrieved a toy that had landed near him, then sat and looked at him as if to say, "Well, there he goes again."

Time passed, maybe 20 or 30 minutes. We had by now begun our morning activities. The other seven Lhasas were playing, and Barney was still under the table. I walked over and pulled out a chair. Barney stood up and casually moved out of the way. I called him to me to offer him a piece of toast, and he ran over, stood up on his hind legs and gently took the morsel. A few minutes later, he was pawing me. I purposely ignored him. He sat back on his rear with his back straight and his paws dangling — in a posing position, yearning for more toast. I gave him some and he gently took it. The same five month old puppies that annoyed him only a half hour ago slid into him in their boisterous play, and Barney only moved aside and watched them.

Okay, this was the Barney I know and love. It's time for attention.

I went in the den and sat down on the couch. Barney followed me, jumped up on the couch and lay across my lap. I ignored him at first, but he was very persistent. He rolled over toward me, practically on his back. His paws were reaching toward me as if to plead for affection. I rubbed his tummy and massaged his shoulders, and when I leaned down toward him, he gave me a big kiss. He was in dog heaven.

Barney was in such a good mood we decided to groom him. We put him on the grooming table and he stood facing the fireplace, eyeing some dog cookies on the mantel. We brushed his full length coat, picked up his pads to trim the hair, cut his toenails and pulled mats...
Rusty is shown winning his third major at the Beaumont Kennel Club Show on September 5th, 1992 to finish his championship. Thank you Judge Edward E Loebe. Special thanks to Michael Kemp for presenting him so beautifully and to Marie Allman for sharing this beautiful red golden boy with me. His sweet disposition makes him a joy to live with. out of his chin. He stood when told to stand, and he even gave us kisses between strokes of the brush. He was a little agitated in that he was constantly pawing us, but we were still able to complete our task. This was a marked difference from his behavior the previous night when he attacked a steel pin brush we dared to move in his direction.

What is this magic pill that transforms Barney from a vicious dog to a playful, happy soul? And why does it work? The drug is a 5 mg. Dexadrine Spansule® capsule (dextroamphetamine sulphate), also known as "uppers." Except for a few short trials with other experimental drugs, Barney has been taking Dexadrine® twice daily since June 1989. It is by far the most successful drug we have found to control Barney's aggression — aggression that is typically directed toward family members only, and also seems to be worse when he is on his own "turf." Like many other dogs with this type of aggression, Barney is extremely friendly toward strangers and, until recently, toward other dogs.

A Brief History

We bought Barney when he was barely six weeks old from a local breeder. We knew nothing about health and temperament guarantees or about the benefits of allowing the dam to train and socialize her puppies for at least eight weeks. We were just looking for a nice pet.

Barney first began showing signs of aggression right away when we had to roll him over on his back to administer ointment for a urinary tract infection. He shrieked and snapped at us, but we just continued to treat him, never dreaming that this might be a sign of a much more serious problem. His aggressive behavior continued to escalate until finally at the age of four months he was snapping and attempting to bite when reprimanded.

Obedience school was the next step. Barney at four months of age did not respond well to the training exercises and reprimands that worked with the other dogs. He was becoming more aggressive and reacted to corrections with hostility. During training he bit my husband twice and me once. I had tried to shake him by the scruff of the neck as instructed and he latched on to my hand and would not let go. (Fortunately he has not bitten us since and has never bit anyone else.) We loved Barney too much to give up on him, so we began consulting experts in training difficult dogs.

Eventually we found an obedience trainer with experience with problem dogs, and he was able to evaluate Barney's personality and train him in such a way that Barney did not feel threatened. We used no force whatsoever, only praise and much positive reinforcement. He eventually learned that obeying us could be a pleasurable experience, not one to fear.

With this new method he learned very fast and was really a very good worker. We began entering him in obedience trials when he was 14 months old and he gave everyone the impression that he was a happy, clown-like dog. Judges even commented on his enthusiasm and laughed at his attempt to untie shoes on the Figure 8. Onlookers would have been surprised to know how this little guy acted at home when he didn't have an audience. He may have been well-behaved, but he was still aggressive.

By the time Barney finished his C.D. at almost two years of age, his aggression toward us had increased dramatically. Not only did he growl and snarl when challenged on his own turf, he was also beginning to go into a "rage-like" state any time he perceived that he was being threatened. In his "rage" state, he would withdraw into himself, growling and snarling, actually appearing to become smaller. His growling turned into screeching noises, his eyes appeared red as blood filled the blood vessels in his eyes and his gums turned white. Finally he reached a stage where he could not withdraw any further, and he attacked any object directly in front of him at about a 12 inch range. He appeared to have no peripheral vision. Oddly enough, this "rage" ended instantly if we yelled, "cookie," or "cheese." His body relaxed and he immediately began jumping or dancing for whatever we had promised. It appeared that he had no idea of what had just happened.

"Rage" states would occur, for example, when we attempted to correct Barney or when he was comfortably asleep in a room when we "dared" to enter. By the time we were a few steps inside the room, he was well into a rage.

By this time, there were two other dogs in the house, a male and a female. His relationship with the male was one of peaceful coexistence — they even napped together. The female, Suki, totally dominated him. If he got too close to her while she was eating, she simply made eye contact with him and he turned his head away from her and walked in the other direction. He eventually refused to walk past her when she was near her bowl. In play, she did not hesitate to make a running start toward him and topple him in order to get him to play.

The situation with humans was serious, however, and it was time to try something else. We vowed to find some way to help him. Maybe we are even more stubborn than he is.

Behavior Modification and Drug Therapy — Just in Time

Primidone® was the only drug that caused Barney to lose liver damage and had to be taken off the drug immediately. (Castration at age 11 months also showed no effects.) After six months he began showing signs of serious aggression, such as Mellaril® (thioridazine) and Anafranil® (propranolol hydrochloride) and Neurosyn® (primidone). Some drugs were ineffective, such as Ovaban® (megestrol acetate) and L-tryptophan, and others increased aggression, such as Mellaril® (thioridazine) and Anafranil® (propranolol hydrochloride) and Neurosyn® (primidone). The drugs were all quite helpful in their own way, and we felt safe around Barney since he was so predictable and so quick to defer to us under Dr. Voith's guidelines.

Voith and watched for possible side effects. In the period between June 1986 and June 1989, we tried several drugs that made Barney more susceptible to our control, including Valium® (diazepam), Inderal® (propranolol hydrochloride) and Neurosyn® (primidone). We used each of these drugs until he developed a tolerance, and then we moved on to something new. The behavior modification was facilitated by drug therapy. Barney's local veterinarian, Kristen King, D.V.M., prescribed the drugs recommended by Dr. Voith and watched for possible side effects. In the period between June 1986 and June 1989, we tried several drugs that made Barney more susceptible to our control, including Valium® (diazepam), Inderal® (propranolol hydrochloride) and Neurosyn® (primidone). We used each of these drugs until he developed a tolerance, and then we moved on to something new. The drugs were all quite helpful in their own way, and we felt safe around Barney since he was so predictable and so quick to defer to us under Dr. Voith's guidelines. Some drugs were ineffective, such as Ovaban® (megestrol acetate) and L-tryptophan, and others increased aggression, such as Mellaril® (thioridazine) and Anafranil® (clomipramine hydrochloride). Primidone® was the best drug we used during that period but, unfortunately, after six months he began showing signs of serious liver damage and had to be taken off the drug immediately. (Castration at age 11 months also showed no effects.)

Barney's level of aggression continued to increase as he got older, although his response rate to commands continued to be 100 percent. Yet, with all the progress we had made in Barney's five and one-half years, we certainly did not want to give up. After all, Dr. Voith had told us at one time that Barney was one of the most aggressive dogs she had ever seen. The only thing that kept him from being the worst was that the aggression had to be elicited by a perceived threat, and it could be terminated by a command.

It was time to try a whole new strategy: affecting a neurobiological change in Barney using a new classification of drugs, amphetamines.

The Pharmacology of Dexadrine

Dexadrine (dextroamphetamin sulphate) is a central nervous system stimulant used in children and adults with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder. Symptoms of ADHD are severe distractibility, short attention span, hyperactivity, emotional instability, impulsivity and sometimes aggression. ADHD is believed to be caused by an imbalance of neurotransmitters which makes the person more susceptible to environmental stimuli. ADHD individuals are often treated with central nervous stimulants such as amphetamines.

Neurotransmitters are hormones that are stored within nerve endings in the central nervous system and mediate the transmission of electrical impulses from one neuron to another. Proper transmission of these nerve impulses is essential in the functioning of the nervous system.

Amphetamines are known to interact with neurons containing neurotransmitters called catecholamines. It is not known for certain which catecholamine — norepinephrine or dopamine — mediates the behavioral effects of amphetamine. It is believed that behavioral depression may be related to a deficiency in catecholamines (usually norepinephrine), while mania results from an excess. Amphetamines may mimic the action of norepinephrine, inhibit its uptake (absorption) or displace it so it can be released to its receptors. (Cooper et al.)

Aggression is a complex behavior that probably involves many neurotransmitters. Theoretically a disorder in Barney's neurochemistry could be the cause of his aggressive behavior.

Samuel A. Corson, Ph.D., of The Ohio State University College of Medicine, was one of the first to study the use of amphetamines in the control of what he termed "violent" behavior in dogs, although his experiments initially were directed toward hyperkinesis (hyperactivity). Experimentation with hyperkinetic, violent dogs "dramatically transformed the incorrigible, vicious, antisocial warrier into a peaceful, cooperative lovable dog who not only permitted himself to be petted but appeared to enjoy the social amenities." (Corson et al.)

While under the influence of amphetamines, the dogs underwent strict conditioning experiments involving positive and negative reinforcement and learning new behavior. The learned responses (positive adaptive social interaction) remained long after the drug was discontinued, although some of the hyperkinetic behavior persisted. The violent behavior largely disappeared after the drug therapy ended. Corson notes that perhaps the effects of amphetamines on certain kinds of aggression (and hyperkinesis) may not really be a paradox, but may actually be a normalizing effect in terms of the animal's neurophysiology.

With this in mind, we started Barney on 5 mg. of Dexadrine® twice a day, which is the dosage for a six year old child. Even with the first pill we saw the same amazing transformation described in Corson's studies. Barney sought affection and no longer seemed to feel threatened by being touched. He began to play again with the other dogs, something he had not done for years, and even wagged his tail to greet us. We began to condition him to being groomed, praising him and giving him a morsel of food for every brush stroke he let us make without his growling. As it turned out, by the end of the first grooming session, we were brushing him with vigor with "no comment" from Barney.

During the first week we did a double-blind study where we gave him two capsules a day but we did not know whether each capsule contained Dexadrine® or a placebo. As you can imagine, we had no doubt which pill he had received. There was a big difference between a defensive snarling dog and a playful, loving puppy.

We then tried 2.5 mg. of Dexadrine® twice a day, but the lesser dosage had no effect. An increase to 7.5 mg. was no better than 5 mg., so 5 mg. was obviously the correct dosage.

There are drawbacks to using this drug. One, even though Barney still has a voracious appetite—perhaps a conditioned response after years of possessive aggression—his increased metabolism has caused him to go from 24 pounds to 19 pounds. (Yes, he is a big Lhasa!) Happily for Barney, macaroni and cheese supplements, in addition to a generous portion of his dog food, are necessary to keep him at 19 pounds. Why Barney still has a voracious appetite rather than increasing it as it does in children. Unfortunately this makes him very slow to respond to commands as if he is slow to process the signals. It is necessary to repeat commands four or five times before he obeys. After obeying, he stands right back up as if he lacks the patience to stay. Although it is a shame he has lost his talent for obedience, it is now not as vital that he do so since he maintains such a low level of aggression while on the drug. It is possible to interact with him on a daily basis as you would with a good-tempered dog. He no longer feels threatened by petting or by being "interrupted." We can't do everything with Barney that we can do with our other dogs—we would not attempt to roll him over, for example. But he is definitely playful and happy, if not particularly mindful.

Barney reverts to his aggressive behavior after each dose of Dexadrine® wears off, unlike Corson's dogs whose improved behavior appeared to persist after the experiment ended. According to Kenneth E. Guyer, Ph.D., associate professor of biochemistry at the Marshall University School of Medicine, Barney's regression is closer to the result you would expect from the drug—children go back to being aggressive and/or hyperactive after their amphetamine wears off. Children, like Barney, "seem to forget how helpful the drug was when they go on a drug holiday," says Guyer. I have always been curious as to why Barney does not remember how advantageous it is for him to be sociable and receive love and affection in return, and apply this positive behavior when he is not medicated.

Also, we were curious as to why the hostile behavior did not "carry over" to the period when Barney was medicated. According to Dr. Voith, this may be an indication that the drug is lowering his motivation to respond aggressively.

Finally, the drug has caused what is referred to as stereotypic behavior—repetitive, nonsensical motions. Barney often sits and "chomps" his jaws as if there is hair in his mouth (there is not). He will do this one hour or so after medication and continues any time he is sitting with nothing to do. When drinking water, he drinks three gulps, spins around once clockwise, and drinks again, repeating this cycle until his thirst is quenched. He also licks the fronts of his front legs causing reduced hair growth in that area. Stereotypic behaviors occur when the dopaminergic receptors are overstimulated. (Swonger & Constantine)

Corson also observed stereotypes in his studies, including circling, pacing, repetitive head movements, running in place and jumping. The dogs could not be interrupted from this behavior, and they appeared to be out of contact with reality. Corson found that stereotypes tended to be related to the dosage administered and there was much variance from dog to dog. He also noted various degrees of anorexia in his subjects. Barney does not seem as interested in our snacks as he used to be, but he is still "crazed" at mealtime. We feel this could be more of a conditioned response or a possessive aggression he is exhibiting, rather than actual hunger.
After receiving our ALAC Register Of Merit award this past summer at Houston, and becoming the FIRST AND ONLY REGISTER OF MERIT BREEDER IN EASTERN MISSOURI AND SOUTHERN ILLINOIS, we are continuing to exhibit with the conviction that a truly superior dog can finish handled by its breeder or owner.

We have five new champions this year!
Sabrina

Ch. Parade's Afterglow
(Ch. Parade's Kiss Of Fire x Parade's All That Glitters)

A face to melt your heart and a personality to match. No wonder, since she is the dear little love of her owner and handler, Michele Moffit. Always living at home as a pet, her superior coat allowed her to live a life of fun while remaining in show condition to finish.

Ch. Parade's Playing Havoc
(Ch. Cameo's Khor-Ke San O'Honeydew x Parade's Miss Sassy Sweet Sashay)

Red Havoc has the incredibly playful and happy ways of her mother and half-brothers, Ch. Parade's Kiss Of Fire and Ch. Parade's Comic Relief, with her illustrious sire's showiness. Ready for fun and games all the time, Havoc has the cobby shape, hard coat, front, rear, and topline I am breeding for, with the precise showy movement that wins. What fun she is!

Ch. Parade's Max A Million

(Ch. Parade's Up In Lights x Parade's Roses and Lollipops)

A happy loved family darling, Max never really cared about show biz. He did cooperate and that was enough. Floating around the ring to his wins, looking snooty and elegant with his exceptional movement and beautiful style, he finished easily. It delights me to sell show quality dogs as pets, and of course when they finish it is fun, too.

A puppy who was daddy’s image from the beginning, Zeusette has all the basics: beautiful teeth, eyes, neck, topline, legs and coat. What brings people out of the grooming tent to watch her though, is the most lovely flying, floating movement I have ever had – from a family that has won consistently on movement. She was described by a top breeder of Whippets as “having all of hers and half of someone else’s too.” My ninth sired by Zeus.
Parade's Constant Comment

(Ch. Parade's Up In Lights x Parade's Shining Moment)

Lacking one major (we just ran out of shows) darling little red Snickers flies like her sire and her aunts and uncles. She has been trained and handled by our friend Michele Moffit except for a couple points.

Little Dancie is one of a litter of four show quality bitches. At her second show, from puppy class, she put up her tail and said, "Is this how I do it?" while taking away a two point win from a lovely open bitch class. We have a fun year ahead with Dancie and her sisters. They all move like daddy.

Parade’s Midsummer Night

(Ch. Parade’s Up in Lights x Parade’s Charmed I’m Sure)

Ritz also has the movement and style we love to see. He and his litter brother, Parade’s Charming Wonderbear have just begun to be seen with their owner handlers, both new to the sport. We look forward to a delightful new year.

The Lhasa Apso standings for 1992 are based on a point system as follows:

- Best In Show: 10 points
- Group 1: 5 points
- Group 2: 4 points
- Group 3: 3 points
- Group 4: 2 points

In the event of point ties, dogs with the highest number of Best of Breeds first. After that dogs are listed alphabetically.

Other wins this year KC of Northern NJ under Judge Bessie Pickens, Suffern County KC under Judge Nancy Riley, and Ramapo KC under Judge Louis Harris and Best of Oposite Sex at Palisade KC under Judge Dr. Harry Smith ... thank you all.

Donny’s litter sister Kenwood Helen of Troy gave birth to three lovely Lhasa’s on October 15th, sired by Ch. Orlane’s Shot In The Dark. We have one Bitch and 2 Dogs who we hope will be at our National Specialty in June. Helen will be back in the ring next year to finish her championsip.

We Feed Science Diet For Healthy Lhasas
One stereotypic behavior started last fall (after 2 1/2 years of Dexadrine®) and is of some concern to us. Occasionally, about an hour after receiving a pill, Barney will go under the bed and bark shrilly at regular intervals as if quite alarmed. It is impossible to get him out from under the bed, but once he comes out, he is fine as if nothing happened. More puzzling, when we denied him access to the bed, he was fine and did not try to find an alternative location. Also, he did not seem upset that he could no longer get to it. Lately he has been standing inside a closet, facing the corner and barking. Again, if we denied him access to the closet, he does not seem upset. Besides being quite annoyed at this behavior, we are concerned as to his state of mind at the time. This is the only really troubling side effect we have seen on any of the drugs he has been on, except for the acute problem from the primidone.

After almost three years on Dexadrine®, Barney is developing some tolerance to the drug. We switched to time-release Spanules in late 1991 after the regular capsules began to lose their effect. Even the Spanules lasted only 5 or 6 hours. Administering amphetamines for long periods of time can cause a chronic depletion of catecholamine neurons, leading to a tolerance to the drug or to the fatigue or depression observed after its withdrawal. (Cooper et al.)

Part of the reason why Barney, when not medicated, is more aggressive now than he was several years ago — besides the natural course of aggression — may be that he experiences this withdrawal after the dosage wears off. In humans, prolonged use of amphetamines can lead to psychotic-like behavior as well as fatigue and listlessness once the drug is withdrawn. Since it is virtually impossible to apply human psychological evaluation to canines, we do not know if this is the case with Barney, but the possibility is of concern to us. We avoid leaving Barney with other dogs and do not interact with him unless necessary when he is not medicated.

For approximately three weeks we substituted Ritalin® (methylphenidate hydrochloride) for Dexadrine®, and it seemed to give Barney a break from the latter drug. Ritalin® was better in that Barney did not exhibit any of the before mentioned stereotypies while medicated and was far less agitated. However Ritalin® has a shorter half-life than Dexadrine®, lasting only 4 1/2 to 5 hours, so we had to medicate him more often at 15 mg. per dosage. We abandoned that drug because it wore off with virtually no warning and was wearing off more quickly all the time.

At this point it is difficult to tell exactly what is going on with Barney, and perhaps only a cranial necropsy will tell the entire story. His (limited) neurological exams have been normal. What makes his behavior puzzling is that his response to other canines and to strangers is deferential — he can clearly discriminate as to whom he wishes to show aggression, or else these situations for some reason simply do not elicit an automatic aggressive response. There is some method to his madness or he would "flail out" at other dogs and people as well.

Why do we do this?

We have been asked many times why we put up with this behavior, especially now that we have other nice Lhasas and are involved in showing dogs. First, a generalization.

A study was designed by Dr. Victoria Voith several years ago to investigate why owners keep pets despite serious behavior problems. Data were collected on 100 cases presented to the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine for serious behavior problems, including aggression. Clients were asked why they had kept a pet so long despite the problem, and 55 percent answered with a statement of affection, such as "I love him." The second most frequent answer was a humanitarian reason such as, "No one else would take this animal; therefore, I have to keep it." Another response was, "You wouldn't get rid of a child because it had a behavior problem, would you?" (Voith 1985)

If an owner decides not to keep a pet because of a behavior problem, says Voith, the decision is usually reached with considerable sorrow and regret. They know that the pet is a domestic animal, but feel about it as though it were a person — often a child.

It is certainly reasonable to say that these three reasons apply to us. We do love Barney, no one else would want him and we can't see "getting rid of him" because of a behavior problem. This writer also has a natural curiosity about the mechanisms of the brain and how they influence behavior, so this has been a valuable learning experience.

Some say we are courageous to battle this problem but, in reality, we don't have the courage to have him euthanized. As long as he is happy, in good health and nearly everyone's favorite of all of our dogs, it simply seems inconceivable, at least at this point, to arbitrarily choose a day to end his life. We are aware, of course, that a time will come, perhaps soon, that we will have to euthanize him, for example if his aggression escalates, he ceases to be predictable or we feel the other dogs are in danger.

We hope others can learn from our experience. The study of behavior is relatively new in veterinary medicine, since the mid 1970's, so we hope Barney's medical history can help researchers. We also hope to present Barney as an example of what can happen when people breed dogs only to make money or breed for conformation only, ignoring what we now realize is the most important factor — temperament.

RHODA TRAVELS WITH HER SCENCE DIET
Ethically we have no reservations about our treatment of Barney. He is not in pain nor is he unhappy. He has the run of most of the house, is never physically or mentally abused and he has not harmed anyone. We are concerned about the possible withdraw symptoms mentioned earlier, but at this point we are not sure how to approach that problem. As he gets older and other physical problems begin to alter his behavior (he has moderate hip dysplasia and osteoarthritis), we may not get the same results. Until then, we make the most of each day with Barney, enjoy his company immensely and are glad we were able to extend his life in such a way that he has remained healthy and happy and has caused no harm to anyone.

We would like to stress that a program such as this is not for everyone. It requires a lot of work (total domination of the dog at all times) and can be emotionally stressful. We have been particularly lucky that Barney responded so well to obedience commands, making his behavior modification so successful. The training could not have worked without 100 percent cooperation from the dog and total commitment from his two "owners."

Also, we would not recommend this procedure to anyone with a larger dog which could inflict great injury or to someone in a household with children or elderly people.

Above all, we urge breeders not to use a dog with any level of aggression for breeding purposes, no matter how wonderful the dog's physical qualities are. Unfortunately, this seems to be the case in many breeds, including in the Lhasa apso. There are many nice Lhasas (and other individuals of any breed) available for breeding stock without having to perpetuate this emotionally (and physically) painful trait.

NOTE: Just before submitting this article, we temporarily stopped the Dexadrine and gave Barney an anorectic drug called Pondimin® (fenfluramine), which is closely related to amphetamine, but is a central nervous system depressant rather than a stimulant. (Thank you to Dr. Kenneth Guyer for the idea.) The drug has been used with mixed results in children with infantile autism, and is believed to have a dopaminergic action. It also may effect the neurotransmitter serotonin, which is a factor in motor activity, aggression and impulsivity. Some studies in autistic children showed a reduction in stereotyped sensorimotor activity, a decrease in anxiety and mood difficulties and an improvement in attention.

On Pondimin®, Barney exhibited no stereotypical behavior, seemed very happy and interested in his surroundings, obeyed obedience commands somewhat better than when on Dexadrine®, interacted more with the other dogs and, as unscientific as this may sound, seemed very "happy." He awaited us in the morning with his tail wagging, and grabbed our slippers all the way outside. Barney liked to be "around" — as if to help out, and would do anything for a cookie.

However, his level of aggression was higher than when he was on Dexadrine®, in that he growled and snarled if approached while sleeping, but then he got up and followed us out of the room as if nothing happened. He also was not as willing to be handled. Part of the problem may have been the difficulty in administering the drug; it was necessary to give him slightly less than 1/8 of a tablet twice a day. Too much sedated him, and too little did nothing. He also had mild diarrhea and some pruritis (itching) during that time. The drug did serve the purpose of giving him a "drug holiday" from the Dexadrine for about four weeks. When we put him back on Dexadrine® we only had to give him one 5 mg. Spansule per day. We may use Pondimin® occasionally for these drug holidays, and use that time to reward his positive behavior and see how much benefit we can derive from that drug.

We would like to thank Dr. Kristen King and Dr. Victoria Voith for their time and expertise in treating Barney. And we would like to thank Barney for all the joy he has given us, despite the sorrow.

CH LUCKY RED IN LOVE

Our 1st show dog is now our 2nd champion. Red’s shown here going BOW for 2 points under Judge Carolyn Thomas to finish with 16 points. A special thank you to all the judges that saw the beauty in our 10 1/4” boy. Many thanks to everyone who helped two beginners get started. Ron Crowder, Eddie Hutchinson, the Herbels, CL Eudy, the Golemons and Robyn and Dick Lily for all the times they opened their home to us. Just to name a few, we’ll always remember you. Most of all Julie Thomas for without her grooming help we’d never would of looked so good.

All of us here at OK’E would like to join Whitehouse Read My Lips OK’E in congratulating her Dad, Ch Whitehouse Chief of Staff on his BEST IN SHOW win. Way-to-go-Dad.

Red will go home to be spoiled with the rest of the OK’Es. He will be at stud to approved girls.

"Fight for the Right" to eat Science Diet
The other day Mr. E.Z. Mark brought his four year old dachshund in for his annual physical examination and vaccinations. Mr. Mark complained that his dog, Insatiable, was losing energy and having difficulty getting around. I did a complete physical examination; nose, teeth, eyes, ears, heart and lungs, skin, hair coat, bones and joints.....it all looked pretty good to me.

The only abnormal finding I came up with was Insatiable's weight. This dog that should have weighed around 15 pounds tipped the scales at a whopping 34 pounds. I told Mr. Mark, "Your dog is fat!"

"Oh," he replied, "I'd like a second opinion."

So I gave him one: "O.K. He's so fat, he's ugly, too." It was obvious why Insatiable was unable to get around. He couldn't stand up for very long holding twice his normal weight. So he spend most of his time sleeping, like a walrus on the rocks. I would do the same thing if I were in his condition.

After the holidays, most of our four-legged friends have a little too much weight to carry around. Too many goodies, not enough exercise, and we all put on a little extra weight.

"Well, how did he go so fat?" asked EZ.

"He probably gets his food from some human he lives with, wouldn't you say?"

"It's certainly not me," was the prepared answer E.Z. Mark came back with. About that time, the blob of fat and fur on the exam table gave a whimper as he struggled to his feet. Old Mr. Mark handed him a tidbit he kept in his pocket for just such occasions. "See?" I exclaimed. "You're feeding him too much."

E.Z. Mark was well defended.

"He looks up at me with those puppy dog eyes as if he's hungry all the time. I can't let him starve to death."

Since E.Z. used the word first, I felt it was time to expound up it. "Death? Death? That's exactly what you are causing in this dog by feeding him so much...."And the 25 minute "Obesity in Pets" lecture started like an old rerun of my favorite move. I almost forgot to vaccinate Insatiable at the end of the office call.

The point is, you may be killing your dogs with kindness. I don't know of any other way to say it. Estimates vary, but some suggest that up to 85% of owned dogs are overweight. It's your fault.

Pets suffer from most of the same things people do with obesity; heart disease, liver disease, kidney disease, arthritis, shortness of breath...the list goes on. Even if your pet doesn't come down with a specific disease, his life span will be shortened.

How much fat should your dog have compared to muscle? We don't really know. But body composition is so important the Morris Animal Foundation is funding a study at the Virginia/Maryland Regional Veterinary College to determine body fat composition in dogs. This will enable veterinarians to adjust drug dosages more accurately.

For now, though, you and your vet are on your own in handling your pet's obesity. The biggest obstacle vets have with the obese pet is dealing with the owners. If you aren't convinced that your dog needs to lose weight, the dog will stay fat. The problem encompasses the whole family. Everyone in the household must be aware that the dog needs to be a diet,

The overall appearance of the puppies was impressive. I expected only puppy behavior and was rewarded with excellent ring demeanor. Heads were varied in shape and size, but few possessed our (Lhasa Apso) terrier type head.

Length of backs in most puppies was too long for me. Front assembly was better than anticipated, however, improvement should be a breeders continued priority. I was some what disappointed with the closeness of the rears. One must understand that correct reach and drive equals sound movement. Remembering the days when "Red was in" encourages one to seek intense colors as befits oriental breeds. Accordingly color and coat texture most often compliment each other. My Best In Sweeps Dog and Best Opposite Sex Bitch exhibited to me the best overall type, structure and performance. They filled my eye and said "Lhasa Apso"

Thank you for allowing me to share another Lhasa Apso experience.

Now back to the drawing board where there is much work to be done, and let's all strive to breed only to improve, improve, improve.

and must support the effort. It's no fun being on a diet, so everyone must pitch in to help the dog lose weight.

One important fact to remember when working on a weight problem is that most dogs are instinctive eaters. Nature tells them to eat when food is there. Look at your dog's cousin, the coyote. When he makes a kill, he eats all he can. He doesn't know when the next kill is coming and he doesn't have a refrigerator to store the food for midnight snacks. If he doesn't eat it now, some else will.

If you suspect your pet is overweight, consult your veterinarian. He or she will first rule out metabolic diseases that can cause obesity problems. Then you can get started on a weight reduction program. It will take some time and will-power, but it will be worth it if you can lengthen your dog's life. So how about it? Start the new year right. Don't make excuses like E.Z. Mark!

Proper Identification of Dogs

With the implementation of the new inspections system, many questions have been asked concerning identification. Prior to getting into the discussion of identification, it is important to understand that these requirements are not new, and that the explanation provided is based on current AKC Rules and Regulations. Chapter 3A, Section 3 of the Rules Applying to Registration and Dog Shows (the “Rules”) provides as follows:

“Each person who breeds, keeps, transfers ownership or possession of, or deals in dogs that are registered or to be registered with The American Kennel Club, whether he acts as principal, agent or sells on consignment, must follow such practices as, consistent with the number of dogs involved, will preclude any possibility of error in identification of any individual dog or doubt as to the parentage of any particular dog or litter.”

Chapter 3A, Section 4 of the Rules reads as follows:

“The American Kennel Club or its duly authorized representative shall have the right to inspect the records required to be kept and the practices required to be followed by these rules and by any regulations adopted under them, and to examine any dog registered or to be registered with The American Kennel Club.”

The Board of Directors, under the authority given them in Chapter 3A of the Rules, has developed Regulations for Record Keeping and Identification of Dogs. As it relates to identification, the Regulations, in part, state:

“Each person covered by these Regulations must follow such practices as, consistent with the number of dogs involved, will preclude any possibility of error in identification of any individual dog or doubt as to the parentage of any particular dog or litter.”

Thus, if more than one dog is shipped to some new owner or if a number of similar dogs are kept in a kennel or a pet shop, a system must be used, such as marking, tagging or tattooing each dog, which will preclude any possible error in identities, and a record of the identifying information must be kept. Puppies from different litters must be so segregated, marked or identified, that there can be no doubt as to the parents or age of a particular puppy, and the identifying information must be recorded.

In situations where the recorded owner(s) has two or more dogs of the same breed and sex, that individual is required to have an appropriate system of identification. As noted above, the identification must be on each dog; therefore, identification appearing only on the dog’s crate or pen is not acceptable. The identification on each of the dogs must be unique and must be recorded on the dog’s written record. Acceptable forms of identification are collars, tattoos and microchips. If a microchip system of identification is used, the owner is required to have in his possession at all times a scanner so that the identification can be read. It is not acceptable for the owner to obtain a scanner for the sole purpose of identification at the time of an AKC inspection, since the need to utilize identification is a daily function. With tattoos and collars, the identification system should consist of letters, numbers or a combination of both. Although it is not required, it is recommended that the dog be tattooed or tagged with its AKC registration number, which will automatically refer to the dog’s record and AKC registration paper.

Identification is to be maintained so that a third party, with no knowledge of the dogs, can match AKC papers and records with a dog. The fact that other family members, kennel help, friends or neighbors may know the identity of the dog does not negate the owner’s responsibility to have identification on the dog. The use of sketches, pictures, nose prints or relying on an owner’s memory is unacceptable as a means of identification.

Identification is the keystone in the protection of the integrity of the Stud Book. An individual can have an accurate recordkeeping system, but if there is no identification system on the dogs; or if the identification system is inaccurate, the recordkeeping system means nothing. Therefore, it is incumbent upon all of us in the fancy to see that we strictly comply with the Rules and Regulations for identification.

Happiest of Holli-daze

Ch. Art-Ex Jumpin' Jebobshplet x Art-Ex Jo-E of Kamelot is all boy, full of vim and vigor. He took the show ring by storm, winning the 6-9 month class at the 1991 National Speciality. Completely owner-handled, Bear finished his championship at 16 months and the next month he won a Group 4 in Montgomery. Bear has produced puppies that are already winning in the show ring.

Holli...

is a picture of style and grace, as she moves around the ring. She is a beautiful golden-red, with a coat “to die for”. She finished her championship at the ripe old age of 15 months, then went on to take a nice Breed win over top winning Specials. Holli is co-owned and loved by The BEST - Esther DeFalcis and Barbara Allendorf.

We're looking forward to the BEST litter, as Ch. Bahr-B's Raz-Bear-e Royale and Ch. Hopeful's Best Holliberri join forces. Puppies arriving on the scene around Thanksgiving.

Our first memories of Ku Su go back to 1984, when he was sent to us by co-owner Carolyn Blondel, with the hope of completing his American title. To say that Ku Su displayed a mind of his own in the ring would certainly be an understatement. His first conformation class, he decided to jump off the table rather than be examined, hanging himself in the process. Fortunately, after that ignominious beginning, Ku Su grew to enjoy the sights and sounds of a dog show, if not the ring itself. He is credited with having kissed (full in the face) 95% of the 40,000 spectators at the March, 1984, Detroit Kennel Club show.

In November of that year, Ku Su courted our Am. Can. Ch. Arkay Lai Dieh Jane, ROM. on January 20, 1985, Janie presented us with 7 boys and 2 girls. With no show homes available to us, we were forced to place all but 3 in family pet homes. The 3 youngsters that we would not part with grew up to become Mult.BIS/BISS Ch. Arkay Tsuro The Energizer (Ricky), Grp. Placing Am. Can. Ch. Arkay Caramel Kiss (Kissy) and Am. Ch. Arkay Totally Awesome (Bobby). All finished in 1986, earning Jane her ROM and giving Ku Su his first 3 champion offspring. In 1986, at age 1 1/2 yrs., his son the Energizer, won the first of a career 41 Group 1's; in 1987, at age 2, the first of 5 All Breed American Best In Shows, all breeder-owner handled.

Ku Su, California born and bred, decided that Michigan winters were not for him. He followed new co-owner Winifred Graye southward to Alabama where, at age 10, he is lord of the manor. Used sparingly at stud, his 4th champion, Ch. Joymarc’s Lady in Red, finished in 1988, and his 5th, Ch. Kimberly Do-Lang Sota Lakota finished in August, 1992.

Our warmest congratulations to Ku Su’s breeder, Gloria Fowler, Everglo, who has been a shining beacon in her dedication to the breed. The Arkay Lhasas style and elegance owes much to our foundation dog, Grp. Winning Ch. Everglo Arkay Paper Lion (Buster) and Ku Su. We are indebted to you Gloria. Congratulation also to owners Carolyn Blondel and Winifred Graye. We are equally indebted to Winnie, who bred our foundation bitch, Joymarc’s Lai Dieh Kai of Arkay. The producer of 2 champions, Katie’s soundness of structure laid the foundation for Arkay generations to come. Thank you Winnie for your dedication in breeding a typey, sound dog.

Ku Su is at stud at Joymarc Lhasas, Birmingham, Alabama, 205-841-5019.
