Boots dances to the tune of Science Diet
Dear ALAC Member:

I imagine that by the time you receive this message, the holidays will be upon us. Therefore, I would like to wish each and every member and their family as well, a Happy Holiday Season.

There is little to report, as a Board meeting is not scheduled until February 1994. I do know that there have been several bids from hotels in the Midwest region to host our 1995 National and that a decision will be reached by mid October by the show committee, as to which hotel will be awarded the contract.

I was informed by the Show Committee of results for the 1995 ALAC National Specialty judges' voting. There were 255 votes counted and the judge with the highest number of votes was Mrs. Robert Forsyth.

I hope that all members are preparing to attend our 1994 National in San Francisco. Let's make it the most successful specialty in history.

We are still looking for persons interested in working on a Breed Rescue Committee. I believe that it's a committee that is of utmost importance and I urge members to get involved.

Again, happy holidays to all. Until next time.

HEALTH AND EDUCATION COMMITTEE REPORT
Lynn Jamison, Chairman

The response to our Public Education Information Table and Canine Good Citizen Program Demonstration at the Specialty was greatly appreciated and even better than expected. As a result the committee will offer the Canine Good Citizen Test in San Francisco and be able to award certificates. We also will have another Public Education Table. The Importance of the Canine Good Citizen Program can not be overemphasized with all of the anti-dog sentiment prevalent in many municipalities today. There are even some subdivisions (mainly on the east coast) that will not allow dogs without a Canine Good Citizen Certificate to be kept in them. In order to qualify for the Canine Good Citizen Certificate a dog must complete the following ten steps: (1) Appearance and Grooming (2) Accepting a Stranger (3) Walking on Loose Lead or Out for a Walk (4) Walk Through a Crowd (5) Sit for Exam (6) Sit and Down on Command (7) Stay In Position (Sit or Down) (8) Reaction to Another Dog (9) Reaction to Distractions and (10) Dog Left Alone while demonstrating confidence and control.

There are many clubs that offer courses so that a dog can pass the Canine Good Citizen Test - most often these courses are six to eight weeks. If a dog is well-trained for the conformation ring then the areas that must be worked on are those involving the sits and downs and stays - a task that in a breed as intelligent as ours should prove to be fairly easy. The committee wants to encourage all participants in the specialty next year to train at least one of their dogs that they are showing to pass the Canine Good Citizen Test. The committee also hopes to be able to hold a Canine Agility Demonstration and be able to work with those interested in agility to familiarize them and their dog with the sport and some of the obstacles. Both Agility and the Canine Good Citizen program offer ways for us to have fun training our dogs without going through all of the rigors of obedience. The dogs love it too.

The committee is asking the membership for ideas on topics for a breeders seminar or forum for the 1994 specialty. We would like to offer a program on a topic of interest to as many as possible in order to have good participation from the membership in the program. Please send your ideas to committee chair, Lynn Jamison by November 1.

On a health note: There is increasing evidence that Lyme Disease can be transmitted by contact with contaminated urine from dogs with the disease. It is usually spread this way only under extremely poor sanitary conditions - but this is another reason to avoid public exercise areas at shows and to have all of your show dogs vaccinated against Lyme disease.

MEASUREMENT CERTIFICATION PROGRAM REPORT

ALAC held its first official measurement certification clinic at this year's National Specialty in Washington, D.C. It gives me great pleasure to report that the response from the membership was enthusiastic and participation was excellent. With the exception of a minor scheduling conflict with the host club everything ran very smoothly and I believe everyone found it extremely educational.

We measured a total of 64 dogs over a two-day period; 45 dogs were certified and an additional 19 dogs were measured only. I would like to offer my sincerest respect and admiration to those people who participated in the MCP--- by including their dogs in this permanent historical record of Lhasa Apso measurements they are also helping to shape the future of the breed, proving themselves to be responsible, objective breeders who are truly dedicated to serving the best interests of the Lhasa Apso. They deserve the respect and gratitude of everyone.

Given the success of our first measurement certification clinic the ALAC Board has granted the MCP permanent committee status and has also approved expansion of the program to include ALAC futurities and local specialties. Specialty clubs interested in conducting measurement clinics may contact the nearest MCP committee member to see if arrangements can be made.

Special thanks should also go to the MCP committee members who worked so hard to make our first clinic such a success, thereby insuring the program. The donations of their time and many helpful suggestions were invaluable and I couldn't have done it without them.

To update and verify current and nonexistent records we need your help! For years the Awards Committee has relied on other ALAC members records to keep on track. I would like to thank Carolyn Herbel, Susan Giles, Barbara Trujillo and Ken Troy for their help in the past.

Effective immediately the Awards Committee will use the dates finished or title earned as recorded in the AKC Gazette for the ALAC Awards. Dogs earning titles or finishing between Jan 1 and Dec 31 will be eligible for an award or be listed on ROM lists.

I need your help with the following:

1. If you own/co-own a dog, whether alive or deceased, that is listed in the current top 20 ROM sire or Dams List please send an updated complete list of champions and their AKC recorded dates.
2. If you own/co-own a ROM sire/dam not yet in the top 20 list, whether alive or deceased, please send an updated complete list of champions and the dates recorded in the AKC Gazette.
3. Please list sex, birthdate, owners (s), co-owners and alive deceased on each ROM Titlest.
4. Response would be appreciated from all those who have received the ROM title.

Current list is:
5 Verification is essential. Without it, it could omit your dog from the current or forthcoming list.

Please send ASAP!

Thanks,
Eddie Hutcheson

American Lhasa Apso Club
National Specialty
July 6 & 7, 1993
Judge: Mrs. James Edward Clark

It is Tuesday the sixth of July, 1993, we're here at the Washington Marriott at the Dulles Airport, in Chantilly, Virginia. We are here today to Judge the Lhasa Apso Club National Specialty. It's hot and muggy outside. We are in an indoor ballroom where I am sure we will be cool! We are doing all the dogs today, Junior Showmanship, and some of the bitches. I will be commenting on placements in the class one through four as well as comments on Veterans class and Best of Breed Class. We are looking forward to a pleasant day.

Nicely filled class, this Six to Nine Puppy Dog Class and typical Lhasas. Some would walk and some would not. We enjoyed ourselves. Some exhibitors seemed to have a sense of humor and I am feeling good this morning and most of the puppies are too. First, clearly to this puppy that stands in first, he is of lovely size, he's cream, he's well off for balance and proportion totally. Has a handsome head, correct length of foreface, correct expression and dark eye. Moved well on both ends, carries his top and has a wonderful disposition. Second is a beautiful puppy dog in gorgeous condition, well-prepared. The puppy that won the class had the clear advantage in a way of moving in front. Third went to a puppy very similar in style to the puppy that won the class. This puppy had the advantage over everybody here-in mouth, he has a near perfect mouth. He's of lovely size, he's cream, a little bit unwilling to move at times, but a handsome puppy good in balance and proportion. And the fourth puppy is a parti-colored puppy (dark red and white), very attractively marked, beautifully presented, very handsome in many respects. The three puppies ahead of him had the advantage in front movement from the side. This puppy is full of himself and he intends to lift a little bit too much in front at this particular point and time. I'm sure he'll work out of it. A nice class, I was pleased to have these puppies.

Puppy, 6 to 9 Months Dogs

1. Hylan Sho-Tru Sintu Bust'n Out, R. Irwin & P. Keen
2. Char-Ru's A Hard Act To Follow, J. Lade & R. Hayden
3. Northwind Rufkin's Late Nite Dave, R. Lombardi & C. Butsic
4. Suntory Barbo Yosemite Sam, B. & B. Prenger

Very interesting class this Nine to Twelve Class and one with a little difficulty making it come together. The dog that won the class is in very good balance and proportion. He's low slung into his legs, he has a hard topline, he uses his legs effectively and well. He's very handsome in head with a good mouth and a good eye, nicely carried tail, he's a very handsome dog and won the class on the basis of his type. The second dog certainly had the advantage over everybody else in here in presentation and in showmanship, he's in immaculate condition, he's shows like the hammers. He moves well, he does everything necessary for a wonderful show dog. He's got a handsome head with a good bite, good eye. The dog that won the class had the advantage, in my opinion, in just slightly more correct outline. The third dog is probably one of the best constructed dogs in the class. He did not have the advantage of showmanship and coat preparation and presentation. This is a clean dog, he's got a beautiful mouth, he's got a beautiful eye, a very handsome head. He's got lovely straight front legs, he had the distinct advantage in the class there, he's good behind, he's got a well set and carried tail. His coat needs to be taken in hand and he needs to be taught that he is somebody of importance so that he acts that way all the time. he's a very handsome dog. The fourth dog very well off in balance and proportion and presentation. The three placed above him had advantages in mouth and in ability to use their front, but this is a nice dog, throws up a lovely picture and has exhibits some wonderful show temperament.

Puppy, 9 to 12 Months Dogs

1. Singh Caught Red Handed, T. Richmond
2. Singh To Catch A Thief, M. Hoaglund, T. Richmond, K. Stahl
3. Tingdene Rufkins Chary My Darlin, Sylvia Nestle
4. San Jo Fancy Duds, L. Engen & M. Nixon

Once more an interesting class to make come together. This Twelve to Eighteen Class won by a cream dog with some markings on him that won the class on the advantages he showed in head, eye, expression and mouth, good body, deep body, good front to go over, he used himself well coming and going and from the side he's low slung into his legs and puts up a lovely picture. The second dog is a smaller dog also very handsome in outline. The dog that won the class had a little advantage here in masculinity, though this is a very handsome little dog and shown in beautiful condition. The third dog is one of the better dogs in the class, however, he’s going through an attack of adolescence and is very, very skinny. He’s a beautiful coated dog. Presented very well, quite sound on the move and he will have his day I’m sure, good in mouth, lovely in expression. The fourth dog is a dark red dog with sable overtones. Beautifully presented dog, very good in motion from the side. The three placed above him had advantages in mouth and this dog is by no means too undershot. I would just prefer his mouth a little more level. Handsome four dogs to use in this class. I was glad to have them.

A very beautiful and very well filled Bred by Exhibitor Dog Class. To everyone's credit their dogs were put down well and shown well and it was a beautiful class to be privileged to judge. First in the class to a parti-colored dog shades of Frier Tuck! This dog is maybe just on the upper edge of the size that I prefer and he's at the most just over eleven inches. He's a black and white parti-colored dog very, very attractively marked. He's very off for balance and proportion, throes up a super outline. His coat is harsh, his mouth is good, he eyes are very close to what is called for in the standard, neither too deeply set no too round and popping. He has a lovely expression with a dark eye. He deports himself well on the move. I was very impressed with him. His tail is set high and carried well at all times. The second dog is a perfectly magnificent Lhasa Apso. The dog that beat him had the advantage in here of being just perhaps a little smaller though not losing any masculinity and had the advantage in eye as well. The second is a cream dog that stands in first and he was severely pushed by the cream dog that stands in second. The dog that won the class had the clear advantage in ability to move coming and going and from the side. The dog that stands in second had a little bit more advantage in texture of coat. They are both of lovely size, good pigment, a handsome pair of dogs. As are the third and fourth very handsome dogs. A little difference in type both of them gold with black finish. The two dogs placed above them had the advantage in texture of coat and a little bit better made in front. These two dogs had beautiful mouths, lovely lengths of neck, nicely placed shoulders, they had gorgeous coat and condition. It was a lovely class I enjoyed it.

Well filled and hotly contested Open Dog Class won by a cream dog that stands in first and he was severely pushed by the cream dog that stands in second. The dog that won the class had the clear advantage in ability to move coming and going and from the side. The dog that stands in second had a little bit more advantage in texture of coat. They are both of lovely size, good pigment, a handsome pair of dogs. As are the third and fourth very handsome dogs. A little difference in type both of them gold with black finish. The winner of the Veteran Dog Class a lovely dog, beautiful in size, balance and proportion, ability to come and go into the circle and keep his topline and attitude. Second to a elderly dog with a lovely head, a perfectly positive topline, lost a little hair on his tail but we can forgive that. The third dog is a black dog with probably the most exceptional coat that I have put my hands on in a long time in the breed, beautiful mouth, beautiful head. The fourth dog is a wonderful dog in wonderful condition, very, very difficult to separate these old dogs and really think that they all deserve a blue ribbon!

A puppy class of sixteen Six to Nine Puppy Bitches won by this very handsome gold puppy with black overlay, is in first, well off for balance and proportion she is well made over her legs and feet, well set tail, good mouth, lovely eye and expression. Second to a puppy very, very similar in type not quite as sure of herself as the puppy that won the class but very similar in many respects. Both of these puppies have nice bone for their size, good forchests, well laid back shoulders. The third and fourth puppies are very similar, the third puppy is cream with some white markings well off for head, eye, and expression and mouth, she's quite full of herself and promises good texture of coat. And the fourth puppy is very similar in type. Once again beautiful eye, handsome head, good mouth. Takes a free stride these puppies all four of them have proper layback of shoulder, return of forearm, and prominent forchest.

Puppy, 6 to 9 Month Bitches
2. Ch. Char-Ru's Going To Extremes, J. Lade & R. Hayden
3. Hon Ny Baywatch Splash Dance, D. & M. Evans, G. & M. Hanks
4. San Sei Carry On, S. Rich

A well filled Twelve to Eighteen Class with two very handsome bitches in first and second very close. First a tawny red bitch with black overlay. Beautiful head, eye, and ear, good mouth, lovely neck and shoulder. Good developed forchest, positive topline, very well off in coat and condition. Second to a grayish bitch with a lot of work to her face, good mouth, lovely eye, once again a good neck and shoulder and good use of her legs on the move. The bitch that won the class had the advantage in length of neck and placement of top shoulder. Both of these bitches are in tremendous coat and condition. The third bitch is a cream bitch with kind of a pale overlay very well off for her head properties, solid topline, good reach in front and good tail placement in carriage. The fourth bitch is a black bitch with some white trim, very full of herself, very sure of herself, but once again good in head, eye, and ear and mouth and in good coat condition with a good texture of coat.

Puppy, 9 to 12 Months Bitches
1. Desiderata Mea Culpa, A. Miller
2. Jedi's Pace Setter Marquise, J. Hays & D. Kittelson
3. Misti Acres String Of Pearls, B. Drake

that was a little difficult to sort out because apart from two or three there were no clear winners. There were a lot of very, very close bitches in here. The bitch that won the class is of lovely size. She has a beautiful head, beautiful pigment, correct, mouth, sound coming and going. She has good amount of coat, proper texture, she's a cream with shadings, she's very handsome. The second bitch is very, very similar to the bitch that placed first. The bitch that place first had the advantage in just being a little bit better in balance and proportion and took a little more free stride. The third bitch is a young bitch. The two bitches ahead of her had the definite advantage in texture of coat. The young bitch is of lovely size, the two bitches above her were just a little bit more important, a little bit more ready for the win. And the fourth bitch, a handsome bitch. A little young here to be totally competitive and I would prefer her mouth to be just a tad more level or reverse scissors, but she's a lovely bitch and I am sure will finish very quickly.

Bred By Exhibitor Bitches

1. Ladell's Lady Rockstad, J. O'Dell & P. LaBarge
2. Dynasty's Royal Ruby, E. Gurosh
3. Misti Acres Sundancer, B. Drake, C. Rutnic, B. Walworth
4. Hylan Sho Tru Flip Off, M. Hylton, P. Keen

Two in the American Bred Bitch Class, first to a smooth moving, nicely coated, good mouthed cream bitch with shadings and markings. And second to a red bitch with black overlay who has beautiful, beautiful texture of coat. But, the bitch that won the class a little smoother on her gaiting and had the advantage in mouth.

American Bred Bitches

1. San Sei Golden Topaz, S. Rich
2. Joy Marlo Mercedes CD, D. Maxwell

A good Open Bitch Class won by this black bitch well off for beautiful size, lovely balance and proportion, good mouth, pleasant head, very sound, beautiful coat, absolutely correct in condition and texture. Second to a cream bitch with shadings, not totally correct in mouth but, she has a lovely head and probably one of the best shoulders and return of forearms that I have touched all day. A very important bitch lovely topline, good coat. Third to a bitch very, very similar in type to the second bitch. Just not as important in bearing and demeanor not that impeccable arrogance that the second bitch has but, a lovely bitch. A fourth to a bitch that matches these three bitches very well. The three bitches that placed above this bitch had the advantage in shoulder placement. But, this is a useful bitch with a good mouth and very good texture of coat. I was very pleased with this class.

Open Bitches

1. Benbridge Shanteal Rani Ru, L. Ruliera
2. Rufkin's She Takes No Prizners, J. O'Dell
3. Rhu-Ha's Kara Tian-Shih, R. Hatcher
4. Kenwood Helen of Troy, K. & B. Troy

Winners Bitch to the black bitch, the winner of the Open Bitch Class on all of her positive points and her impeccable texture of coat and her attitude. And reserve to second in the Open Bitch Class, the winner of the Bred By Class had the advantage in mouth here but, the incredible arrogance and bitch type and character put on by the bitch that make a strong push to win the Open Bitch Class carried her to reserve.

Best of Breed to a very correct cream dog very well off for size, balance and proportion, good head, good mouth, dark eye-correct shape. Straight front legs, moved and showed well coming and going and from the side. Opposite sex to a beautiful shaded cream bitch in magnificent condition. Again, good head and eye, correct in mouth, straight front lets, hard topline in magnificent condition. Best of Winners to my Winners Dog. I was very proud of both my Winners Dog and Winners Bitch in the Specials Competition, as they looked and deported themselves well, both of them very correct. Had a lot of awards and merits. It was a wonderful specialty and I enjoyed every minute of it and hope that the competitors did as well.

Lhasa Rankings - An Overview

by KENNETH TROY
President - Sentinel Consultants Inc.

We are well into the 1993 judging year, with results now available through the end of May. As we believed at the beginning of this year it is basically a two dog contest between Ch. Hylan Shotru Storm Bird and Ch. Rjay's Two Socks.

With the year almost half over the 34 point lead Storm Bird has, just about makes him the leading Lhasa in 1993, even were he to be retired before year end. After Two Socks the drop in points is precipitous with Ch. Rufkin's Kindred Spirit with 28 points so far. But for the next top 12 contestants there is a real horse race.

Which brings us to the Best of Breed points we began tabulating this year. A BOB point is awarded each dog that wins the Breed, for every other Champion they beat in Breed competition. Here again Storm Bird is way out ahead with 61 points to the second highest pointed dog Ch. Hope-Ful Hansel Hansel with 43 points.

The BOB points is a way of judging the competition, each Special is encountering in the ring throughout the country. The toughest competitive area is in the middle-Atlantic region. Notably the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and New Jersey. Here the number of Specials at most shows are large. So we see that Specials while not placing in the Non-Sporting group are still beating many other Lhasa Champions. Notably these Lhasas are Hansel and Ch. Misti Acres Kopper Penny who rank second and third in BOB points.

What makes placing in the Non-Sporting group even more difficult for Lhasa's in the Middle Atlantic states is the heavy competition from the other breeds within the group. Top winning Poodles, Dalmatians, Keeshounds, Shar-Pei's and Tibetian Terriers are fierce competitors in this area. We've also observed the increase in some of the top handlers from other groups that are now handling Non-Sporting dogs in the Middle Atlantic states, making the competition even harder.

So our advice to would be Lhasa Special owners, if the want to rack up Group placements, enter your Special in areas of the country where competition is easier, namely Western PA, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, the Pacific Northwest and Northern California. The southern states and Texas are interesting in that two dogs jumped into the top 10 because of a vacuum created by the retirement of last year's top winners. These Specials are Ch. Wellington Baywatch Surf's Up in Texas and Ch. Tatli Su's Windchaser of Tikal in the lower southern states.

We also see a lack of Special Bitches this year. Leading the list of Bitch Specials is Ch. Kayla Kaleko Upsa Daisy in 19th place. She competes in the Middle Atlantic states and has to beat the big Lhasa dog contingent, so her feat is even more remarkable. If you have that great Bitch Special sitting in your kennel this is the year when she can make her mark.

There are new Lhasa Champions coming out of the classes and we expect some new competition will be in there scraping for recognition this fall and next year. If you've got that quality Lhasa Special and the money it takes, the field is wide open to make the top 10 Lhasa list.

The maintenance of breed distinctiveness is always something that the fancy is, or should be, concerned about. This is particularly so because over the years practically every breed population changes, in some instances a notable degree. Those changes mostly come about by man's design through selective breeding but a natural drift in characteristics can also occur. As dogs bred exclusively for exhibition have become far removed from their original environment, and the purposes for which they were developed, there is a constant danger of losing some unique features, subtle though some of them may be. This begs the question of whether or not we are in an irreversible process of creating generic show dogs. Dogs that are increasingly more uniform, although they still look very different, than their immediate ancestors; more consistent in their overall construction, gait, instinct and temperament especially. Are some of those intrinsic characteristics being lost; is a return to homogeneity inevitable? More than a few members of the fancy believe this to be the case and view it as an unfortunate trend. Without being too alarmist, it is certainly something to consider thoughtfully and to ponder about. Because also the majority of present-day pure-bred dogs have a mixed ancestry there is always need for concern over preservation of what can best be called breed integrity. By integrity in this context we mean the sum of the features that typify a particular breed and distinguish it from all others; in other words, the precise characteristics that constitute its type. This includes such things as innate instincts, details of structure and size, peculiarities of movement, and so on. There is also, of course, the requirement that it invariably breed true! Divergence between breeds varies in degree depending upon their origin, history and over-all make-up in terms of ancestry and lineage.

A number of breeds are closely similar in most respects, others in some, such as head features, while still others are very different and highly unique unto themselves. Take as an example of the first category, for instance, the four breeds that are commonly referred to as Belgian Sheepdogs or Belgian Shepherd Dogs; the Groenendael, Laekenois, Malinois and Tervuren. These have been variously referred to as varieties of a single breed or treated as separate entities. There are cogent arguments in favor of both points of view, of which more later. Differences between breeds often reflect the purposes or functions for which they have been selectively bred over, in some cases, many centuries. The transition from Canis familiaris to the various forms of the domesticated dog is largely undocumented but we do know that some breeds have evolved and been derived from dogs whose features are not precisely known. That is, from dogs that were never designated and recognizable as specific, true-breeding entities but whose general characteristics can be guessed at. A few breeds, such as the Ibizan Hound, the Pharaoh Hound and the Saluki, can be traced back thousands of years as distinct forms. There is no scientific certitude, however, when attempting to determine the precise development of many breeds, even some that have come into existence during the last one hundred years. The presumed ancestral make-up of many breeds is, in fact, frequently mere speculation. Oftentimes, when the ancestry of a breed is not, or imprecisely, known its origin is said to be shrouded in the mists of time. A nice way of pleading ignorance! Many breeds are of relatively recent creation, up to and including the present century, and have come into being by crossing previously well-established breeds. The Cesky Terrier, a blend of...

Scottish and Sealyham Terriers, presently unrecognized by the AKC but having FCI status since 1963, developed in Czechoslovakia between the two world wars and afterwards, is among the most recent. There is, incidentally, a population of over one hundred of that breed in this country at present. In some cases breeds have been lost, or almost lost, and subsequently recreated; witness the Cavalier King Charles Spaniel and the Irish Wolfhound.

The subtle differences that typify various breeds are many, both structurally and in temperament and behavior. The three breeds of setters recognized by the AKC, the English, Gordon and Irish, although having a more or less common ancestry with a pointer and spaniel combination in their background, are distinct though having considerable similarity. At first glance, the most noticeable resemblance between them lies in overall shape and possession of those special qualities of an avian hunting dog, sometimes colorfully referred to as 'birdiness'; a certain style, a certain alertness, a certain expressiveness. The most obvious difference, is of course, color but there is rather more to these breeds of dog than mere shape and coloration. Whether setters and their near relatives, the spaniels, from which they are assumed to have been partly derived, still retain their hunting instincts to the fullest after generations of breeding for show is debatable. As I have said in a previous article in this magazine, however, the resilience of a dog's genotype is quite remarkable. Divergence in features is in part a reflection of different ancestral influences, in part the result of selective breeding for particular traits. The Irish Setter is thought to possibly have more hound in its make-up than the English or Gordon. Hence a somewhat different hunting style, a tendency to point upright rather than set, and a difference in substance and construction, having more slender bone and a more pronounced tuck-up. There is a belief that a cross to a tri-colored Collie played a part in the creation of the Gordon, the setter with the most bone, and there may be even some Bloodhound input in its background although this is, in the view of some, just conjecture. There are differences in behavioral traits, the Irish Setter being by far the most easily trained. All these factors contribute to each breed's integrity.

The distinctiveness and ability of the forms of Belgian Shepherd Dogs is less substantial than that of the setters discussed above, hence the recent decision by the Kennel Club of the United Kingdom to discontinue separate breed recognition. In this country, only three are given breed status; the Laekenois, a rough-haired, fawn variety, remaining unrecognized. These breeds differ in color and length of coat and one of the factors justifying the single breed designations is that there has been a problem with the forms always breeding true. The reappearance of the short coat Malinois feature, which is regulated by a dominant gene, in litters of long-haired forms and recessive fawn and grey Tervuren colors in Groendael litters, where both sire and dam have the characteristic black coat, brings into question the wisdom, practicality, and need for separate classification. I am not expressing an opinion or position here; merely conveying information! The history of varieties is closely interwoven, with each having a mixed ancestry. This is not to say that breeds distinguished predominantly by only one feature, such as coat coloration or ear carriage, should necessarily be denied individual recognition. Otherwise we might not have Norwich and Norfolk Terriers, given separate status by The Kennel Club in 1964 and followed fifteen years later by AKC! Although the Ibizan Hound and Pharoah Hound are similar in build, but different in color, there is no doubt of the validity of their separate identity. Centuries of geographical isolation of the former on the Balearic island of Ibiza, though they might have common ancestral roots in ancient Egypt, brought about genetic distance between the two. Broad similarity in appearance or name does not always reflect close relatedness or even common ancestry. Consider the Cardigan and Pembroke Welsh Corgis which could be assumed, ignoring their tails and certain other small differences, to be near-cousins based on overall look, conformation, origin, and their traditional function as herders in adjacent old Welsh shires. They were once shown as one breed and gained separate status at The Kennel Club only in 1934. Their lineage, however, appears to be rather different, the Cardigan descending from dogs of the Swedish Vallhund type, whereas the Pembroke is thought to be of Flemish origin, with connections back to Spitz breeds, of which the Keeshond is an example. These are essentially achondroplastic dogs, with defective conversion of cartilage into bone resulting in dwarfism.

The distinct, so-called wrap-around front is an integral part of achondroplastic breeds such as Basset Hounds, Bulldogs, and of course, Pekingese! Not all these relatively low-to-ground dogs are exactly the same with regard to front legs, however. Some have somewhat straighter fronts than others and this, of course, is reflected in movement. It is interesting to consider what is called for in the standards of several of these breeds. That of the Cardigan Welsh Corgi dictates that the forearm, radius and ulna, curve to fit the spring of ribs, making the wrists closer together than the elbows, whereas the Pembroke standard states that the forearms should turn slightly inward, again with the distance between wrists less than between the shoulder joints, giving a front that does not appear absolutely straight. The forelegs of today’s Pembrokes are quite short and almost straight, differing somewhat in this regard from their progenitors of say fifty years ago. The wording of the Dachshund standard in regard to the forearm is, interestingly, essentially identical to that of the Pembroke Welsh Corgi! No mention is made in the Basset Hound standard of the desired shape of the forearm per se, merely that the forelegs should be short. Likewise in the case of the French Bulldog, where the forelegs called for are to be short, stout and straight. The standard of the Pekingnese asks specifically for the bones of the forearm to be bowed. A pronounced outward bow is considered to be desirable. This breed represents among dogs the quintessential example of genetic dwarfism, originating from a natural mutation resulting in arrested development of long bones. Achondroplasia occurs, of course, in many other species of animals, including man. Associated with the condition in the Pekingnese is a broad, barrel-shaped chest with well-sprung ribs giving a frontal heaviness and a peculiarity of movement variously referred to as swaggering or rolling. There is a lot of dog up front. Its style of movement is an all-important part of its uniqueness. When the rolling gate is absent or less pronounced in a Pekingnese its character is diminished and its integrity therefore compromised. It is occasionally said that there is a danger of its disappearance. Although there may be some element of truth to this, generalizations concerning the condition of any breed at any time are usually rather low in accuracy. A tendency to draw conclusions of this sort is one of the fads, or should I say foibles, of the fancy. Opinions are usually based on subjective, restrictive evaluation rather than on thorough knowledge. Little credence should be placed on such assertions without gaining a broad-based overview. When considering this type of feature one usually sees a cross-section of variables from dogs with very short, straightish forearms to specimens that are taller with appreciable curvature of the radius and ulna. Similarly, there is some variation to be seen in width of chest and spring of ribs and the resultant pear shape of the body. In these, as in many other aspects of structure where dimensions and proportions are critical, there will exist extremes on either side. The desirable is the intermediate between the two, where there is a balance of body parts. A dog will then exhibit ideal breed type and its integrity will be assured! While on the subject of Pekingnese, there is one other vitally important element. Never forget the wonderful but, to a human, sometimes annoyingly nonchalant attitude! It is as much a part of the breed as is that look of eagles, the expression created by eyes gazing into the distance as if in memory of ages past, as its standard states, in the Afghan Hound. If my readers did not already know, there really is just a hint of poetry in some standards!

Discussion of front assemblies leads into thoughts on movement. If there is one area where a trend toward the generic show dog is most evident it is in this regard. Part of the impetus arises from show requirements, the need to impress. That translates into a perceived need for speed, whatever the breed! Now some breeds are not meant to move rapidly. Therein lies the rub. Equalization in this matter means changes and it means loss of intrinsic breed characteristics. Likewise, in the matter of showmanship; some breeds are not naturally "showy" and to try and make them so destroys a part of their character. There are many knowledgeable people who hold the opinion that dogs generally tend to be raced around the rings excessively nowadays, especially in group competition. Such breeds as the Chow Chow and Bulldog are not constructed for fast gaiting, anymore than the Miniature Pinscher is. The hackney-like gait of the latter, with its head held high, is not a speed movement. Posture when movement is viewed from the side should be peculiar according to breed and is an integral part of type. In an Arctic sled dog, such as the Alaskan Malamute, the head is not carried high as in the Poodle. The notion that flashiness is advantageous has definitely led to certain changes in dogs and particularly in the way some of them are handled. Consider the Manchester Terrier, by purpose originally a rat killer with a neck of moderate length. There is now concern that longish, ewe necks, ones with concave curvature of the top neck line, and incorrect carriage, may becoming prevalent. With conditioning and inducement in the form of reward there is an evident tendency for some dogs to out move their structure, so to speak, and balanced propulsion is thereby lost. It is critical that rear drive is in total harmony with forward reach. The English Foxhound, for example, is built for endurance rather than speed; hence straight stifles are preferred over a well-bent condition, such as in the Greyhound. Particular types of movement are highly characteristic. The seemingly "loose" movement of the Bloodhound is noteworthy in that regard. Its gait is aptly described in the AKC standard as being elastic, swinging and free! Mention has already been made of Pekingnese movement. In a breed such as the Poodle, the gait is a straightforward trot with more or less even propulsion, although there is strong drive from the rear.

There are many other examples of subtle breed characteristics that have changed over the years and some of which may be in danger of being lost. One area where breed integrity is vulnerable to being compromised is in increase or loss of substance. Boxers today, for instance, are heavier made and bigger in bone than they used to be, whereas the trend in English Cocker Spaniels is in the opposite direction. Newfoundland-like heads in Great Pyrenees are a problem, some of the elegance of the latter being lost because of it. Then there are other aspects of structure and reflected appearance than those discussed above; among them topline, angulation, comparative length of bones, and so forth. Swimming breeds have level toplines or a reverse sloping topline, higher in the rear, as in the Chesapeake Bay Retriever. The standard of that breed, interestingly, calls for the hindquarters to be as high, or a trifle (that is the word used!) higher, than the shoulders. In the different terrier breeds, the varying proportions of upper arm to shoulder blade, and associated layback, are important and reflect their background and, to some degree, their function.

Some are "go to earth" dogs, hence their name from the Latin word "terra" meaning land or earth, others are not. In the forequarters of the former type, variously called an upright "terrier" front or a pivot front, the scapula is rather long in proportion to humerus and the angulation is open. In contrast, in the smaller breeds, such as the Cairn Terrier and the West Highland White, which was originally a variety of it, the two bones are more evenly proportioned and consequently there is greater layback.

Individual breed integrity is based on a myriad of small but fundamentally important differences. To understand them properly, the fancier, particularly the newcomer and the novice, should always learn of, and bear in mind, the various functions that particular dogs were bred to perform. In the case of the toys, the aesthetic qualities are of primary concern. Only with a knowledgeable eye back to the past can absolute integrity be maintained and the legacy preserved. Narrowly focussed, pragmatic preoccupation with the requirements of a show dog exclusively will undoubtedly lead to erosion, if not disappearance, of some of the distinctive characteristics of many breeds.

Dogs have been sources of joy and objects of passion for a number of musical composers. The lives of Stephen Foster, Richard Wagner, Ignace Paderewski, Wolfgang Mozart, Edward Elgar and Edward MacDowell were enriched by the various dogs they owned. The following is an account of those dogs and the ways in which they affected their musical masters' lives.

American folk song composer Stephen Foster (1826-1864) was fond of dogs and owned a couple of them during his lifetime. When he was living near the edge of a park, he was approached by a lively and friendly setter. The dog loved to play and romp through the park with Foster and the two quickly became steadfast friends. The faithful friendship that Foster shared with this special dog later became the inspiration for a song, "Old Dog Tray." He also owned a formerly homeless mongrel named Calamity. Adopted by Foster, Calamity had a sad, mournful howl and became very attached to the talented composer.

Opera composer Richard Wagner (1813-1883) was especially fond of dogs and owned a number of them throughout his lifetime (for related story, see October 1992 I p.14). Because he and his first wife, Minna, had no children, Wagner said their dogs filled an important void in their lives.

An example of this is found in one of Wagner's journals. On the day that one of his favorite dogs, Fips, died, Wagner wrote: "The effect of this melancholy event upon Minna and myself was never expressed in words. In our childless life together the influence of pets had been very important."

Peps, Koss, Pohl, Fips, Fuss, Faf, Robber, Drek and Speck were various dogs that lived in the Wagner household. However, of all his dogs, probably the one that best captured his heart was the lovable Peps. Whenever Wagner finished a composition, he would play it for Peps and then wait anxiously for Peps' bark of approval.

Wagner was deeply affected whenever one of his dogs died. Once, upon returning from a concert tour, he discovered that his dog Pohl had died. Wagner was hurt and upset when he discovered that Pohl had been roughly buried in the garden; he immediately had Pohl unearthed and reburied in a more suitable grave under some trees. At the burial ceremony he gave for Pohl, Wagner was so overcome with emotion that he nearly fainted. As a special tribute to his beloved friend, he commissioned a stone monument to mark the burial site. Another account of Wagner's life mentions that while he was in Bayreuth he was greatly saddened when his dog Russ died.

Polish pianist and composer Ignace Paderewski (1860-1941) owned an affectionate and friendly dog named Macius, whom he dearly loved. Once Paderewski's assistant ran after Macius to prevent him from dashing ahead of his master and slipping into the car, Paderewski told his assistant it was all right to let Macius stay and take a ride with him. Macius slept contentedly at Paderewski's feet the entire time.

Wolfgang Mozart (1756-1791) had a small female Fox Terrier named Bimperl, who was just a puppy when the 17 year old Mozart acquired her. Bimperl was not only mentioned in Mozart's journal but also was the subject of many letters written to his family when he was performing in cities all over Europe. In a letter from Vienna to his sister he wrote, "How is Miss Bimperl? Please give her all sorts of messages from me."

Bimperl became despondent when Mozart left for a lengthy journey to Paris with his mother in 1771. Apparently the rest of the Mozart family -- including Bimperl -- had a bad day. Nannerl, Mozart's sister, had a headache and went to bed. Bimperl crawled in beside her. Mozart's father, Leopold, also went to bed but was awakened shortly afterward when the whimpering dog asked to be taken out for a walk. Nannerl later wrote Mozart, "Bimperl too lives on in hope, for she stands or sits near the door for half-hours on end-thinking that Topaz showed like a pro and even made her breeder look good! Thank you Mrs. Savori for starting this sweet girl out with a bang.

Watch for litter sister San Sei Lil’ Diamond (Lily) with Sue Guilmino this fall.

weeks later, Bimperl was still waiting anxiously for her musical master to return.

English composer Edward Elgar (1857-1934) was exceptionally fond of dogs. Since Elgar had no immediate family, he bestowed his love upon his favorite Collie, Scap. Scap accompanied Elgar nearly everywhere he went and was mentioned numerous times in letters he wrote to friends. Scap was fond of running alongside Elgar's tricycle, which the composer frequently rode through the countryside. Commenting on Scap's popularity, Elgar later said, "Everybody loves him and all my lady pupils even kiss him, to my intense disgust."

Elgar, who was very protective of Scap, had a close encounter with the law over his joyful Collie. Once while on a walk, another man's dog apparently began attacking Scap. Elgar retaliated by giving the man's dog a swift whack with his walking stick, which angered the other man. After threats of police court and so on, the two men reached an agreement. Elgar later said that from that time on, whenever they would pass each other, the gentleman would tip his hat to him and keep his dog carefully tied up.

The Scottish-American composer Edward MacDowell (1861-1908) was very devoted to his little terrier Charlie. Charlie assumed the same role -- music critic -- as Wagner's Peps, MacDowell taught Charlie to bark happily when he heard the music of Wagner, but to howl dismally when he heard Brahms.

New Tick Species Are Potential Lyme Carriers

Research conducted in two separate studies confirms that three new tick species are potential transmitters of Lyme disease.

In one study, RNA testing was conducted at the U.S. Public Health Rocky Mountain Laboratory in Hamilton, MT. The tests proved that Borrelia burgdorferi bacterium that causes Lyme disease was present in the Lone star tick and the American dog tick. The organism in these ticks was initially identified by researchers at St. Louis University.

These new results expand the list of potential Lyme disease transmitters to include tick species covering nearly the entire United States.

Previously, there were two species of ticks associated with the transmission of Lyme Disease: the Deer tick, which occurs in the northeast and midwest United States, and the Western black-legged tick found in California and Oregon. Both ticks are members of the Ixodes family.

Lyme disease cases have been reported in Missouri and other eastern and south central states, where Ixodes ticks do not exist and where the Lone star tick does.

In the past 10 years, the reported cases of Lyme disease has risen dramatically. The disease has been identified in all 50 states, compared to 1983 when only 10 to 15 states reported cases of Lyme disease. Dogs have the greatest risk of contracting the disease, as ticks sequester themselves in the coat and go unnoticed.

Since Lyme disease is extremely difficult to diagnose, prevention through vaccination is the key to protecting dogs from this debilitating disease. A new vaccine, the only one of its kind, is now available through veterinarians. See your vet for more information on the disease and the need to vaccinate.

When I first began my studies of measurement in Lhasas 20 years ago, no one was particularly interested. Today there seems to be some stirrings of genuine concern for correct size, so I figured it was time to trot out my data one more time for those of you who care. (You know who you are.)

It is possible to predict the adult height of a puppy from its age and height. For more than 20 years, I have collected measurements of puppies, from 5 weeks to maturity. I found that there was a fairly simple mathematical relationship between height and age during the period between 6 and 35 weeks of age. During this span of ages, the height was proportional to the logarithm (\(\log_{10}\)) of age. Below 6 weeks the relationship did not hold because the subject was not standing and above 35 weeks there is a rapid leveling off of growth.

* Most pocket calculators will calculate the Logarithm of a number. So will slide rules. If you have neither, get one.

This relationship holds for all lines of Lhasas. The average limit of accuracy (or mean deviation) is plus or minus \(\frac{1}{4}\) inch. Exceptions include puppies who have been sick, or were sub optimally nourished. It is important to note that the accuracy is dependent on serial measurements, because one measurement of a very young puppy may be inaccurate, and severely skew the results. Also the accuracy increases with age. Obviously the closer the pup is to his adult height, the smaller the possibility of error. However, since this project was conceived as a way to help people decide which pup to keep, and which to sell, I designed it so that the prediction would be reasonably accurate by 12 or 13 weeks. Thus I would recommend measuring at 9-10 weeks, again a week later, and a third time a week later for maximum accuracy...

The formula is as follows:

Ha = Hp \times 1.54 \frac{\log_{10} Ap}{Ap}

\(Ha = \) Height of the adult
\(Hp = \) Height of puppy
\(Ap = \) Age of puppy in weeks

Example: We take the height of a puppy at the following ages.

<thead>
<tr>
<th>AP</th>
<th>Hp</th>
<th>Log</th>
<th>Ha</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>9 weeks</td>
<td>6.5 inches</td>
<td>Log 9 = 0.954</td>
<td>10.49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 weeks</td>
<td>7.0 inches</td>
<td>Log 10 = 1.00</td>
<td>10.78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12 weeks</td>
<td>7.5 inches</td>
<td>Log 12 = 1.079</td>
<td>10.70</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Average HA = 10.65

Our predicted height would be about 10.7 inches, or 10.5 to 11 inches allowing for a quarter inch of error.

T-Ritz Lhasas Love their Science Diet
All of you old enough to be reading this have already formed your moral character, and any amount of moralizing on my part is not going to change anything. Those who need to change their moral behavior are not going to be wasting their time reading this anyway. They're in the ring engaged in their dirty tricks.

First of all, a dog show is a dog show, just that. It is not a people show. From the date of my first dog show, both as observer and owner/handler, I have thought this whole business was set up and started in the wrong manner. If it's a dog show, why are so many handlers on stage with the dog a mere excuse for their act? All dogs, I suppose even the most stupid, can be trained, and with our little breed, who can certainly tie their own shoestrings, lack of intelligence is the least of our problems. I am not a dog trainer, but all my "kids" have been owner handled; I've never been to a class of any kind, and in the beginning (and occasionally yet) I got only a little help and advice from one friend (Irish)--that's right, one! everyone here jealously guards everything he knows (and doesn't know!). My first champion had two points before I even knew I had to collect them. My dogs and I learned together. I have many champions and any one of them could show himself.

This is the show scenario of my dreams: my Lhasa, perfectly groomed by me while she slept, leaves me at the entrance of the ring, enters the ring and poses for the judge. She then trots to the table where I have unobtrusively positioned myself, and is assisted onto the table by me. She barks her age, and poses; the judge examines; I step up and assist my girl down from the table. She flings her tail up, sticks her little aristocratic nose in the air, and trots around the ring, returning to the judge. The judge hand signals a triangle, she sets out, trots the triangle, comes back to the judge, and poses. The judge dismisses her, and she retires to the side where I have again positioned myself inconspicuously to wait with her while the other Lhasas are being judged. When all have been examined and shown, the lead dog is signaled by the judge and trots around the ring, the others following, until the judge signals stop, and they all stop in front of their respective owner/handlers who have been waiting. When the judging is finished and ratings received by the owners/handlers, a signal is given and the lead dog leaves the ring followed by this owner/handler, as do all the other in order. In my dream, no dog chats up the judge, wears skin-tight clothes nor a plunging neckline, not one dog wiggles its derriere to catch the front of another, or a little in front of all to attract the judge's attention. No dog steps on another dog's tail nor passes him, nor does any of them stand on his hind legs and bounce around his owner to show the judge how cute he is. In my dream we are happily free of the tricks of the two-legged show-offs.

When I began showing Lhasas in Spain, the shows were dominated by German Shepherds and hunting dogs. In our Group there were mostly Poodles--all sizes, all colors, Poodles everywhere. In ten years the number of breeds and the number showing in each breed has increased enormously--and so has the

Trickery can be very subtle, and under the guise of friendship, often occurs just as your are preparing to go into the ring. This is my first (but by no means my last) experience with a "friend" — a Poodle breeder and competitor (though not much) in our Group. Several years ago in Chinchon, a very small show, as I started to enter the ring for brace competition, my "friend" who was standing at the entrance stopped me and said, "Is that Sacha and Chuey you're showing?" I said, "No, Tai and Chuey," and started to move into the ring, my daughter urging me to hurry. My "friend" put her hand on my arm and said, "I thought is was Sacha. They look so much alike, how can you tell them apart?" I said, "I live with them remember." and hurried into the ring just as the trophy was being handed to an old man leading the only other brace—two unmatched rather decrepit-looking dogs. I started to complain. The judge smiled and gave the Spanish shrug. Dejected, I trailed out—my "friend" was making a fast exit. My daughter said, "Who was that bitch?" and she didn't mean the one in the show leash.

This "friend" never gives up; she still comes round when I am getting ready to go into the ring, always with an exciting bit of news in an attempt to distract and unnerve me. I can also tell if I'm on a winning streak—she is constantly at my elbow. If my dogs are losing, my elbow is cold.

Let me address a delicate subject. It is my belief that one's sexual proclivities are personal, private, and belong in the bedroom, boudoir, the back seat of a car—wherever, but one place they definitely do NOT belong is in the show ring. When we have a straight male judge, cleavage abounds. When we have a gay judge, many straight owners do not even bother to show because if a gay owner-handler shows, and his dog has all its equipment (4 feet, 2 eyes, etc.) it's going to win.

As you may or may not know, in Europe we have a lot of people with titles, such as kings, queens (by birth or marriage, not by closet), princes, dukes, barons— I can't remember them all, but you're probably impressed by now anyway. Many of these accidents of birth have time on their hands (they don't do dishes, clean the commode, or carpool kids, etc.) and so they diversify, get involved in interesting hobbies, not actually they, themselves (they're too busy reigning, collecting rent from the serfs, or whatever it is they do), but their representatives—handlers. Being into dogs is a big thing with these people; then of course, all their relatives want to get into the act also. Of course, the actual owner of the dogs being shown is a BIG secret—which everybody knows, first and foremost the judge!

Along with the titled, there are the rich and important, and the judges' friends—which doesn't leave much of a chance for the rest of us.

Selection of judges can involve another sly bit of trickery. If you can look at the roster of judges for a show for Breed, Group, and BIS and know from those names which dog is going to win, isn't something afoul?

A couple of years ago, our kennel club began requiring "cartellist" a little book for each dog which must be presented at the judges's table when we walk into the ring with our dog. We must buy one for each dog shown, and it must be presented with the dog each time he is shown. If you have a bad memory, you'd better have a good amount of money, because if you forget the "cartilla" you must buy another for each dog every time you forget, and they cost $10 each. I've bellyached about these because the judge can look in the books and see what the dog has won (or not won) before he makes a decision. To me, this is cheating, but friends advise, "Don't make waves."

These are just some of the things I know about; can you imagine what goes on that I don't know about!

Kennel club members, monographic club officials, breeders and exhibitors are all beginning to put their paws down about some of the illicit practices going one and are being greatly supported by the two leading dog publications.

I suppose it would be impossible to eradicate trickery completely, but if we don't fight against it, those perpetrating their hoaxes will see themselves getting away with it, and it will become worse.

Dog showing is not for the faint-hearted! One has to be strongly principled and disciplined to succeed, and it someone is stepping on our toes (paws) with immoral behavior, we must defend ourselves and our dogs.

If someone cheats us, they cheat our dogs, and like our children, we don't want to see our dogs cheated.■

OH, SAM, YOU'RE A CHAMPION!

CH. ARKAY FULLY ENERGIZED*

Our beautiful Sam is shown taking a major and Best of Breed over Specials competition to complete his title under judge Nancy Riley on August 22, 1993. Sam's show career was brief, fun and memorable! As a puppy, he defeated 19 youngsters to win his class under Gerti Braesick at the 1991 ALAC/GDLAC Specialty. Sam's most recent trips to the ring resulted in a terrific showing at the ALAC National (2nd in Open) and his first major win early in August at Waukesha KC under breeder judge Ed Haas. Thanks to all the judges who fell in love with our boy.

Amy started with a four point major under Mrs Jean Fancy and finished with a three point major under Mrs. Dora Lee Wilson. Along the way she went reserve to tow five point majors at Greater Milwaukee Lhasa Apso Club Specialties. She is CJ’s fourth Champion. Amy finished breeder, owner handled.

Thanks to all the judges along the way who appreciated her lovely and correct movement, size, head and expression. ‘Amy’ was bred to Indian Hill Jedl Echoing AMC. She produced a lovely litter and we have too many show prospects to choose from so we are offering for sale two black & tan males and one red sable male. These puppies are futurity nominated for 1994.

Chubs is CJ's fifth champion finishing in February of '93 by going Winner Dog from the Bred by Exhibitor Class at the Greater Milwaukee Lhasa Apso Club Specialty for his last major under noted Judge Mr. Desmond Murphy. He picked up his 1st major under Mr. Cyril Bernfeld at the Twin Cities Lhasa Apso Club Specialty weekend in January of '93, also from the Bred by Exhibitor Class by going Winners Dog. Chubs was bred to his half sister Jedi’s Two Seater AMX producing a show quality male. We have high hopes for this young dog but would consider placing him in a good show home.

"Ruby" set the pace by going 2nd against stiff competition at the National Specialty. This capped off a great week in D.C. with three 2nd's and one 4th in a class of 19, 9-12 month puppy bitches.

She has been out pacing the big girls back home by taking reserves to majors from the puppy class and placing now that she has moved up.

Ruby sends congratulations to Nash on his Best Puppy in Eastern Futurity in D.C.

Anyone who starts a conversation stating that sportsmanship is essential to the proper enjoyment of dog shows is almost sure of getting a considerable amount of approval. This is because the vast majority in the sport of dogs pay at least lip-service to sportsmanship. But do we all mean the same thing when we say "sportsmanship?"

We can easily mention qualities most desirable in an exhibitor such as perseverance, fortitude and a sense of humor, without which it is almost impossible to keep the strange happenings of the dog show in their proper perspective. But once we mention "sportsmanship" we soon discover it does not convey the same meaning at all.

Men and women have been trying to express their thoughts in words and others have been trying to filter the thoughts out of these words for centuries. The famous professor Joad earned himself an international reputation by his very cautious approach to any question asked of him. If he was ever asked, for example, whether children should be taught classics he would answer "it all depends on what you mean by classics" before discussing the matter. Perhaps it is mainly those whose living depends on the manipulation of words who fully realize that Joad's question was neither frivolous nor fatuous but asked purely with the object of getting a clear definition of a word.

Acting with considerable fairness is one accepted interpretation of sportsmanship. However, it has come to be quite commonly interpreted at dog shows to mean that sportsmanship is the kind of behavior that one is entitled to expect of everyone else without any obligation to return the compliment.

It is not unusual at continental European dog shows to see winners surrounded by an excited crowd of friends and relatives showering praise and congratulations on them. If such scenes were present in our North America they would meet with a great deal of disapproval. But are our rings any better for some of the conventions that masquerade under the guise of sportsmanship? It is a very natural reaction to become elated over a victory, and we accept some signs of pleasure. However, in attempting to avoid over-reaction, it is not unusual for this to be carried to extremes in the form of a poker face, giving the impression that having won is the winner's right.

It is not unusual to see some losers attempting, with varying degrees of success, to assume expressions intended to indicate they are graceful losers. Others can give the impression that the judge started at the wrong end of the line when handing out

AKC presumes that judges are honest and ethical. But, it is your responsibility to protect your reputation. At this time, we would like to re-emphasize the following gray area that is currently generating a great deal of both correspondence and telephone calls to and from the office: Judges who also exhibit.

As stated in the Guidelines, you must be constantly vigilant and aware of "gray areas" so that your integrity is always above reproach. Here is what the Guidelines have to say on the subject:

"Breeding and Exhibiting. All judges start in the sport as breeders and exhibitors. It's natural to want to continue these activities after becoming a judge. AKC understands this. Judges who exhibit are frequently a major source of complaints. This is even more so for judges who handle their own dogs. AKC would prefer judges not to exhibit and judge on the same weekend. However, it's acceptable to exhibit or have your dogs exhibited at shows at least 200 miles from an event at which you officiate.

Many judges combine exhibiting and judging without ever causing complaint. The reason is simple: They are prudent in how and when they exhibit. Judges who exhibit should expect to be subject to special scrutiny. AKC will evaluate all complaints concerning judges who also exhibit on an individual basis. Whatever steps are deemed necessary will be taken in each particular situation."

At the July 1993 meeting of AKC's Board of Directors, the policy against judging and exhibiting on the same weekend for those doing sweepstakes and futurities was revised. Those judging sweepstakes and futurities are now exempt from this prohibition. Keep in mind, however, that this exemption applies only to those doing sweepstakes and futurities and refers to exhibiting at other shows on the same weekend.

For example, if you are doing a Kerry Blue sweepstakes in the morning, you cannot exhibit Airedales in the afternoon at the same show. However, you would be able to show dogs the next day if you choose to do so. If you do decide to exhibit and judge a sweepstakes or futurity on the same weekend, it is recommended that common sense be your guide and that you not expose yourself to potentially difficult situations.

Members of your household and dogs you co-own are covered under the umbrella policy of the Guidelines. For example, no member of your household is eligible to enter any dog at a show at which you are judging, even in breeds you are not adjudicating. This applies even if you are only judging a sweepstakes at that show. However, members of your immediate household are eligible to enter at a show you are judging, but if you are not judging any classes for which they might become eligible, including Best in Show. With co-owned dogs, even if you have not seen the dog since it left your home as a puppy, as a co-owner of record, the dog should not be exhibited on the same weekend venue when you are judging, either before or after your assignment.

When you become a judge, you take on a different role in the fancy. You are immediately considered an expert by the neophyte on all matters pertaining to dogs. The work and dedication that you put into becoming a judge does, rightfully, command a degree of respect among other breeders and exhibitors. You may also find that being a judge is somewhat akin to living in a goldfish bowl. It is no secret that dog show exhibitors like to gossip. Any action by a judge, no matter how innocent, can be construed by a disgruntled exhibitor as being devious or having an ulterior motive. As stated in the Guidelines, "The key is to avoid situations that might give the impression of impropriety."

What does it mean?
Ever heard the expressions "long and low" or "high on leg"? How about "long-backed" or "short-backed"? Whether people realize it or not, when they use these terms they are describing proportion. Another, and much more specific, method of describing proportion is to use a longer than tall percentage.

Most people are accustomed to thinking of dogs in terms of height. Our standard gives us specific numbers to use as a guide in regard to height, which makes it easy to understand. Proportion is somewhat more difficult to identify. "The length from point of shoulder to point of buttocks longer than height at withers". What? How much longer? And, if we do manage to figure out "how much longer" we think is correct, how do we describe it to others in a way that they can understand and apply it? I think we have all felt the frustration of trying to describe our ideal to someone else..."Ah, this dog is a little longer than I like. No, that dog is just too square for me. I like them to be, well, you know, kind of in between". Sound familiar?

The solution to this problem is to describe dogs using their longer than tall percentage. They all have one, and it is relatively easy to figure out (see graph). Take, for instance, a dog that is 11" tall and 15" long. This dog is 36.4% longer than tall (11" plus 36.4%) which is about average length. Now, take a dog that is 11" tall and 14" long and you will find that he is only 27.3% longer than tall (11" plus 27.3%) and he is looking fairly short-backed, or square. An 11" x 16" dog is starting to look pretty long-backed at 45.5% longer than tall (11" plus 45.5%) and an 11" x 17" dog at 54.5% longer than tall (11" plus 54.5%) definitely qualifies as "long and low"!

As you begin to understand how to apply the percentage to each dog you will start to understand exactly what you are seeing. More importantly, you will learn that you have a range of preference that you can identify to others if you choose to. You will be able to say to someone "I prefer a Lhasa that is 30% to 35% longer than tall" or "35% to 40% longer than tall" or even "40% to 45% longer than tall" and that person will understand exactly what you mean.

You will also begin to understand that height really has very little to do with proportion. One commonly held misconception is that small dogs are automatically long-backed. This simply is not true. A dog that is 55% longer than tall is going to be "long and low" regardless of whether he is 10" tall or 13" tall. Conversely, a 13" dog that is 30% longer than tall is no higher on leg than a 10" dog that is 30% longer than tall. Length determines the proportion, not the height.

The illusion of length
We also need to remember that the human eye is easily fooled and that certain conditions can create an illusion of length that is entirely false. The most obvious of these is of course grass, but there are also other, more subtle things that we need to consider such as coat, shoulder placement and tailset. Be sure you understand every aspect of the dog you are evaluating before judging what it's length might be, or better yet, measure it!

What is correct?
Our standard is not specific about how much longer than tall our Lhasas should be, so there is no absolutely "correct" length. However, we do have some clues about what our ideal range of length might be from some of the things our ribbons. I have often wondered whether the winners who have developed the art of accepting their wins without expressing any animation should be considered as the ultimate in sportsmanship. I am doubtful if this is in any better taste than the winner doing handsprings around the ring. The latter at least would be displaying some kind of human emotions and pleasure out of a win. The former is indicating as clearly as if stating it that he or she was only getting what he or she deserved, and that showing dogs and winning is a bore.

Good sportsmanship is not a matter of simple conventions. It is something that goes deeper than the outward form. The principle that one's actions should be based entirely on avoiding any annoyance or harm to others can be made to cover almost every facet of human conduct.

It applies to those who drop pieces of liver all over the ring to make their own dogs show better, while they are quite oblivious to whether this distracts other dogs in the ring. Also, it applies to those who let their dogs go on the end of a long lead to unnerve other dogs who are not quite so confident. One could go on at length listing the petty spite that comes into the category, but even if one refrains from doing all these things, one has only achieved what many would interpret as a negative form of sportsmanship. More than this is required to qualify for the title of good sport.

Unfortunately, even those who are most anxious to honor and obey the dictates of good sportsmanship in dogs find themselves confused over some of the issues involved. Kennel clubs tend to encourage what could be interpreted as a form of bad sportsmanship. This stems from the fact that they do not, or cannot, take action against wrongdoers unless someone else lodges a complaint. Consequently, people are torn between their sense of duty to the sport, the governing body or the exhibitor and the risk of being unsportsmanlike. It is little wonder that it is quite easy for people with the very best motives to get confused in their interpretations of sportsmanship and its obligations.

Perhaps the professor was indeed very wise -- it depends entirely on what you mean by good sportsmanship. (Reprinted from the April 1993 Dog World)

ORLANE'S BOOMERANG
(Ch. Orlane's O.J. X Ch Orlane's Boom Boom)

Breeder and co-owner: Linda Kendall Smith, Orlane

Boomer is now back at home after completing his U.S. championship. A big thank you to Linda Kendall Smith of Orlane for her excellent care, and to E. Wayne Baker for helping Linda to finish him.

Professional and other commitments permitting, Boomerang will be shown occasionally in Europe along with his first kids out of Audace’s Julia Flyte Am Ch Orlane’s Impudent of Windwick - Finnish Ch Orlane’s Blanche, an Alamo daughter). Of them, Finnish Ch Audace’s Brenda Rex gained her title in three shows, and another daughter, Audace’s Polly Cockpurse, is on her way to her Finnish championship.
Completed his Championship under Judge Mr. Frank Woliniuk at Burlington County K C. This is the 45th Lhasa sired by our great producer Ch. ORLANE'S INIMITABLE (ROTTEN). With this new champion Rotten now is the 2nd leading producer in the history of our breed just 1 dog ahead of our foundation sire (BIS) Ch. Everglo's Spark of Gold. Also shown below going Best of Winners, Rotten grand daughter Darragoj's Finishing Touch with Orlane founder Dorothy J. Kendall.

Sire: Ch. Orlane's Inimitable Dam: Orlane's The Black Cat

We have several new litters out of Rotten's son CH. ORLANE'S IMPUDENT OF WINDWICK. We welcome inquiries from serious exhibitors looking for a great showdog.

Mockingbird's Sugar and Spice
(Ch Kaleko's Gorgeous George x Du-Laruj Countess Daisy Bear)

Sugar is close to finishing and will then be bred to Ch Tiblaterr's Threads The Bear (litterbrother to BISS Ch Tiblaterr's Ty-Breaker - Westminster Award of Merit 1993). She has a baby sister - Mockingbird's Sugar Cookie - who will be out soon. Sugar is shown by Cynthia Sawyer.

Also, congratulations to Enrique Garcia and Orlando Irizarry on their George daughter - Mockingbird Caribbean Fantasy Whoopi's completion of three International Championships.

Sugar thinks Science Diet is sensational.
Dog Software & Services

Over the years we have been bringing out many new products for the owners of Lhasa's and other pure-bred dogs. In the near future we will be completing our software products when we introduce computer software for KENNEL MANAGEMENT and PROFESSIONAL GROOMERS.

These new programs are K-G MANAGEMENT for Kennels and K-G Management for Groomers. These will be complete programs that cover every aspect of kennel management and running a grooming shop. If you have an interest in this type software contact us at the address or number above or write for information and release date.

We continue to provide the following software and services for dog owners:
